GOUGH, John Bartholomew, Congregationalist, layman, famous temperance orator; b. at Sandgate, Kent, Eng., Aug. 22, 1817; d. in Philadelphia, Penn., Feb. 18, 1886. His father had been a soldier from 1798 to 1823, and had been honorably discharged on a pension of twenty pounds per annum. He was of a stern disposition; yet his heart was tender, and his children loved him. In church connections he was a Methodist. Mr. Gough's mother was a Baptist, an intelligent, sober-minded, gentle, and loving woman, who had been for twenty years the village school-mistress. He was taken from school at ten, and put to service in a gentleman's family. In his boyhood he enjoyed a village reputation as a good reader. About this time he was struck on the head by a spade, and rendered insensible. His life was for a time despaired of, and then his reason; and indeed he never fully recovered from the blow, for, whenever he was excited from any cause, he felt pricking and darting sensations in his head. One of his earliest amusements was to personate characters, as in amateur Punch-and-Judy shows, and otherwise, showing his rare talent for mimicry and acting. There seeming to be small prospect of his advancement at home, his parents accepted the offer of a Sandgate family about to emigrate to America, who engaged for ten guineas to take him with them, have him taught a trade, and provide for him until he was twenty-one. He sailed from London, June 10, 1829, and arrived in New York, Aug. 3; went with the family to the farm they had purchased in Oneida County, N.Y., and staid with them for two years; and then, having received his father's permission, he left them, and made his way to New-York City, where he arrived in the latter part of December, 1831, friendless, and with only a half-dollar in his pocket. He was then a member of the Methodist-Episcopal Church on probation, and so was induced to lay his case before Mr. Dands, the agent of the Christian Advocate and Journal, upon whom he made so favorable an impression, that he secured him a place as errand-boy and apprentice in the book-binding in the Methodist Book Concern, where he had for a companion John McClintock, who afterwards became the well-known Methodist theologian. Young Gough was taught book-binding, and soon became remarkably skilful. Some of his Methodist friends proposed to educate him for the ministry, but the project was abandoned,—indeed, he withdrew from the denomination. (He later on joined the Congregational Church.) In 1832 he left the Book Concern, and secured elsewhere such good wages by his trade, that he sent for his father, mother, and only sister, who was two years his junior, to join him in New York; and the latter two arrived in August, 1833. His father remained behind, so as not to lose his pension. His sister was a straw-bonnet maker, and worked at her trade in the city. But in November, 1832, he and his sister lost their positions, owing to the hard times, and did not soon get regular employment. Thus the family was reduced to such straits, that when his mother died, July 8, 1834, there was no money for a funeral, and her body was buried in the potter's field. After a brief visit to his former home in Oneida County, he returned to work in the city in September. It was then, when he was about eighteen years old, that he began to drink. His fund of amusing stories, and his wonderful ability to tell them, naturally made him a favorite among the young men he met. Under the name of Gilbert, he sang a comic song entitled "The Water Party" at the Franklin Theatre in Chatham Street, New York. In 1836 he went to Bristol, R.I., and then to Providence. His intemperance was now noticeable, and led to his discharge by successive employers. Once, while out of work, he played low-comedy parts in a theatre in Providence, and then in Boston, where, strangely enough, he personated the keeper of a temperance inn in a play entitled Deported Spirits, or the Temperance House (in which Deacon Moses Grant and Dr. Lyman Beecher were ridiculed), but his engagement lasted only a few weeks. He frequently sang comic songs in public. In 1838 he married at Newburyport, Mass.; but his wife and child died at Worcester in 1840. On the last Sunday of October, 1842, at the age of twenty-five, by invitation of Joel Dudley Stratton, who at the time was a waiter in the American Temperance House at Worcester, Mass., but later was a boot-crimper (see sketch of Stratton in Gough's Autobiog., p. 522), he signed the pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors at Worcester. The next week he was called upon to relate his experience as a drunkard; and the way in which he told his story of wretchedness, disease, and want, led to frequent requests to repeat it in public, and so he gradually became prominent as a temperance orator. Within five months (April, 1843) he thoughtlessly violated his pledge in Boston, when, almost insane in consequence of a drug taken to relieve his nervous exhaustion, he was offered, by an old companion, a glass of brandy. Again on Friday, Sept. 5, 1845, in New-York City, he was tricked into drinking liquor in a glass of soda-water. On each occasion the single glass aroused his craving, and he drank until intoxicated. His second fall was the more deplorable because he was then a widely known advocate of total abstinence. But he retained the confidence of the public, and showed true repentance. On Nov. 21, 1813, at Worcester, he married Miss Mary Whitcomb, his second wife. In 1853 he was invited by the Scottish Temperance League, and the British Temperance Association, to lecture on temperance in Great Britain for a few weeks; but he staid two years, and returned in 1857, and remained three years. On Nov. 21, 1860, he delivered at New Haven, Conn., his first lecture not directly upon temperance ("Street Life in London"), and thus entered a broader field in which, by his lectures on "London," "Eloquence and Orators," "Peculiar People," "Habit," and other topics, he has delighted thousands on both sides of the ocean. But he never lost interest in temperance work, and introduced the theme prominently in every lecture.

Mr. Gough was one of the most remarkable natural orators of this century. He was endowed with a musical and flexible voice, a winning manner, and a fine presence. He had both laughter and tears at his disposal. No one was superior to him as a story-teller. In proof of his popularity, it may be mentioned, that his receipts per lecture rose from $2.77 in 1813, to $173.39 in 1867. (See Autobiography, pp. 217, 218.) His life was that of a humble Christian, nor could he ever forget his years of intemperance. He was remarkably gifted in prayer. He was the author of several volumes, — Autobiography, London, 1816 (it was dictated to John Ross Dix, — or, as he then called himself, John Dix Ross, — a short-hand writer, who then was an inmate of his family, and who subsequently claimed the authorship of the book on the strength of a few verbal alterations he had made); Orations, 1851; Autobiography and Personal Recollections, Springfield, Mass., 1869; Temperance Lectures, New York, 1879; Sunlight and Shadow, or, Gleanings from my Life-work, London, 1881; Platform Echoes, Hartford, 1886. •

Græci*, in Schaff's Companion to the Greek Testament and English Version, New York, 1883; and of articles in the Journals and Transactions of learned societies, particularly of the American Oriental Society (chiefly decipherment of Cypriote and other inscriptions, Syrian MSS., etc.). Society of Biblical Archaeology (London), American Philological Association, Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, etc.

HALL, John, D.D. (Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn., 1866). LL.D. (College of New Jersey, Princeton, 1885, and from Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., 1885). Presbyterian; b. in County Armagh, Ireland, July 31, 1829; graduated from the Royal College, and the General Assembly's Theological College, both in Belfast; and was licensed to preach in 1849. For the next three years he labored as the "students' missionary" in the West of Ireland. In 1852 he began his regular ministry as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Armagh; in 1858 he went to Dublin as collegiate pastor of Mary's Abbey; and thence in 1867 to the Fifth-avenue Presbyterian Church, New-York City, where he still is. In college he was repeatedly Hebrew prizeman; and in Dublin his interest in education led to his being appointed by the Queen, in 1860, a member of the Board of National Education, upon which he served gratuitously until his departure to America. In 1867 he came as a delegate from the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to the Presbyterian Church in America. In 1882 he was elected chancellor of the University of the City of New-York, and in 1885 accepted the position, having meanwhile been chancellor ad interim. He receives, however, no salary, and is assisted by a vice-chancellor. In 1874 his congregation removed from the corner of Fifth Avenue and Nineteenth Street to that of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, where they had erected a spacious building at the cost of a million dollars. Dr. Hall is the author of Family Prayers for Four Weeks, New York, 1868; Papers for Home Reading, 1871; Familiar Talks to Boys,

n. d.; Questions of the Day, 1873; God's Word through Preaching, 1875 (Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale Seminary); Foundation Stones for Young Builders, New Year's Book for the Boys and Girls of America, Philadelphia, 1890; A Christian Home, How to make and how to maintain it, 1883.

HALL, Newman, LL.B. (London University, 1855). Congregationalist; b. at Maidstone, Kent, near London, Eng., May 22, 1816; educated at Totteridge and at Highbury College; and graduated B.A. at the University of London, 1841. From 1842 to 1851 he was minister of the Albion Congregational Church, Hull. In 1851 he went to London, to his present charge. The congregation then worshipped in the Surrey Chapel (Rowland Hill's), Blackfriars Road; but in 1876 they removed to their new building, Christ Church, on the Westminster-Bridge road. Mr. Hall's ministry has been an eventful one, on account of the independence and vigor of his work. He was among the earliest advocates of total abstinence in England, a deprecator of the tears of Roman-Catholic aggression in 1850, and a faithful friend of the North in the late Civil War. After that war he made an extensive tour through the Northern States, with the express design of allaying the popular bitterness against Great Britain, and preached before both houses of Congress assembled in the House of Representatives, on a Sunday in November, 1867. As a memorial of this visit, there was built the Lincoln Tower, as part of his new church, by joint subscription of the British and Americans. This church cost £60,000, and seats two thousand persons. The Church-of-England service is used in a slightly modified form. Mr. Hall is the author of the tract Come to Jesus, London, 1846 (of which nearly 3,000,000 copies have been circulated, in upwards of twenty languages); It is I, 1848 (130,000 copies of the English ed. up to 1885); Antidote to Fear, 1850, new ed. 1869; The Land of the Forum and the Vatican (travels), 1852, new ed. 1859; Sacrifice, or Pardon and Purity through the Cross, 1857; Conflict and Victory (a biography of his father, J. V. Hall), 1865, new ed. 1871; Homeward Bound, and other Sermons, 1866; From Liverpool to St. Louis, 1868; Pilgrim Songs in Cloud and Sunshine (poems), 1871; Prayer, its Reasonableness and Efficacy, 1875; The Lord's Prayer; a Practical Meditation, 1883; Songs of Earth and Heaven, 1885; besides several tracts and minor treatises, of which may be mentioned, My Friends! Follow Jesus (246,000 copies of the English ed. up to 1885); Now! Quench not the Spirit; A man of Goodwill Has Grace and Unity; Scriptural Claims of Total Abstinence.

He studied at Halle, Germany, with Ullrich, 1873-74. He has published since 1860 various articles in the Free-will Baptist Quarterly, Crabtree's Record, etc., Dover, N.H.; also Questions and Notes, with an Analysis of Butler's Analogy, Lewiston, Me.

HAYGOOD, Atticus Greene, D.D. (Emory College, Oxford, Ga., 1870), LL.D. (South-Western University, Georgetown, Tex., 1884), Methodist (Southern Church); b. at Watkinsville, Ga., Nov. 19, 1839; graduated at Emory College, Oxford, Ga., 1859; entered the ministry, was Sunday-school secretary M. E. Church South, 1870-75; president of Emory College, 1876-81; agent of the "John E. Slater Fund" since 1885. He declined election as Bishop in 1882; was member of General Conference in 1870, 1871, 1878, and 1882. He is the author of Our Children, New York, 1876; Our Brother in Islam, 1881; Sermons and Speeches, Nashville, Tenn., 1883.

HEARD, John Bickford, Church of England; b. in Dublin, Ireland, Oct. 26, 1828; entered CMS College, Cambridge, obtained a scholarship, wrote the Hulsean theological prize essay, took the Whewell prize in moral philosophy, and graduated B. A. (first class in moral science tripos) 1854, M. A. 1862. He was ordained deacon and priest, 1852; vicar of Bilton, Harrogate, 1861-68; editor

Religious Tract Society, 1806-73; curate of St. Andrew's, Westminster, London, 1878-80; and since 1880 has been vicar of St. John's, Caterham, Surrey. His standpoint is that of Tholuck and the German "Vermittelung" school. He holds firmly the historical faith as summed up in the Apostles' Creed, but classes inspiration, as he does that of church authority, among the inquirenda rather than credenda. His principal aim as a writer has been to trace the lines of a Christian psychology which should form a support and not a conflict with theology as at present. The reigning Cartesianism of body and soul seems to him to be a defective draught of human nature; and the error being a root one has affected the whole of theology, at least of the Western Church and since Augustine. To this extent he describes himself as anti-Augustinian, not as opposing Augustine's doctrines of grace, but as showing that Paulinism is a much deeper, truer, and broader draught of the purposes of God than the theology of the fifth century. He is the author of The Pastor and Parish (a £100 prize essay on pastoral theology), London, 1865; The Tripartite Nature of Man, Edinburgh, 1870, 5th ed. 1883; Old and New Theology; a Constructive Critique, 1885.

HECKER, Isaac Thomas, Roman Catholic; b. in New-York City, Dec. 18, 1819; brought up a Protestant; in 1843 joined the community at Brook Farm, West Roxbury, Mass., and some months later that at Fruitlands, Worcester County, Mass. For a time he lived with Thoreau in his hermitage. In 1845, on returning to New York, he became a Roman Catholic, and entered the Society of the Redeemptorist Fathers in 1847, having passed a novitiate of two years at St. Trond, Belgium. Until 1851 he did mission work in England. He returned to America in 1851, and continued his labors there. In 1857 he was at Rome released from his Redeemptorist vows, and allowed to organize a new society, "The Congregation of St. Paul the Apostle," of which he has ever been the chief. The Paulist Fathers, as they are called, are almost entirely Americans and converts from Protestantism, and have proved themselves most efficient. Since 1865 they have carried on The Catholic World, a monthly of ability and honesty. Father Hecker attended the Vatican Council as procurator of Bishop Rosencrans, Columbus, O. He is the author of Questions of the Soul, 1855; Aspirations of Nature, 1857; Catholicism in the United States, 1879; Catholicism and Protestants agreeing on the School Question, 1881 (the last two are pamphlets).

HEDEGE, Frederic Henry, D.D. (Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., 1852), Unitarian; b. at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 12, 1805; graduated at Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., 1825, and at its divinity school, 1828; became pastor at West Cambridge (now Arlington), 1829; at Bangor, Me., 1835; at Providence, R.I., 1850; and at Brookline, Mass., 1856; retired, 1872. He was teacher of ecclesiastical history (1857-77), and professor of German (1872-81), in Harvard University. "As a preacher he is connected with the Unitarian communion into which he was born, attached to it rather by the absence in that body of any compulsory creed, than by sympathy with its distinctive doctrine. His view of Christ is essentially that of the two natures, as defined by the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451)." He was for some years president of the American Unitarian Association. He is the author of Prose Writers of Germany, Philadelphia, 1848, 3d ed. 1871; Christian Liturgy for the Use of the Church, Boston, 1853; Reason in Religion, 1865, 2d ed. 1875 (repub., London); The Primæval World of Hebrew Tradition, 1870; The Ways of the Spirit, and other Essays, 1877; Atheism in Philosophy, and other Essays, 1884; Hours with German Classics, 1886.

HEFELE, Right Rev. Carl Joseph von, Ph.D. (Jonn., Bonn, 1868), D.D. (Tubingen, 1838), Roman-Catholic bishop; b. at Unterkoehen, Wurtemberg, March 16, 1800; studied philosophy and theology at Tubingen from 1827 to 1832, and then for a year in theological seminary at Rottenburg; was ordained a priest, Aug. 14, 1831; was capitlan at Tubingen in 1834; taught in the Rottweil gymnasium in 1835; in 1836 became tutor for Mohler, at Tubingen; there in 1837 professor extraordinary, and in 1840 professor ordinary, of church history and patrology, in the Roman-Catholic faculty. He was ennobled in 1853; was a member of the Wurtemberg House of Representatives from 1842-45; in 1868 and 1869 was one of the council to prepare for the Vatican Council, which he attended, and in which he opposed the infallibility dogma. On Dec. 20, 1869, he was at Rottenburg enthroned bishop of Rottenburg; and on April 21, 1871, he promulgated the new dogma in his diocese, and in 1872 publicly announced his acceptance of it. HUGHES, Right Rev. Joshua, D.D. (by Archbishop of Canterbury, 1870). lord bishop of St. Asaph, Church of England; b. at Newport, Pembrokeshire, in the year 1807; educated at St. David's College, Lampeter, Wales; took first-class in final examination, B.D.; was ordained deacon and priest, 1831; became vicar of Abergwili, 1839; of Llandovery, 1846; also rural dean, surrogate, and proctor in convocation for the diocese of St. David's; bishop, 1870. •

HUIDEKOPER, Frederic, Unitarian minister; b. at Meadville, Penn., April 7, 1817; entered Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., in 1831, but in 1835 was forced by his failing sight to abandon study, to which during the next four years he devoted ten minutes a day. From 1839 to 1841 he travelled in Europe, and then studied theology privately for two years. In 1841 he aided in organizing the Meadville Theological School, in which institution he had charge of the New-Testament department 1841-49, and of ecclesiastical history 1845-77, besides being for many years librarian, as also treasurer. His eyesight has since boyhood been diminishing; total blindness of one eye and approximate blindness of the other has since 1883 caused need of an attendant when in the street. The disease is painless, and the eyes apparently clear. He is the author of Brief of the First Three Centuries concerning Christ's Mission to the Unheathen, Boston, 1854, 5th ed., New York, 1883; Judaism at Rome, B.C. 76-A.D. 140, New York, 1876, 6th ed., 1885; Indirect Testimony of History to the Genuineness of the Gospels, 1878, 3d ed., 1883.

HYACINTHE, Father (whose full name is Charles Jean Marie Augustin Hyacinthe Loysan); b. at Orleans, France, March 10, 1827, and educated privately under care of his father, who was rector of the University of France, attached to the Academy of Pau. After taking his degree of B.A. he entered (1845) the Seminary of St. Sulpice, Paris, and there studied philosophy and theology under the first masters of religious science. He was ordained a priest at Notre Dame de Paris, June 11, 1851, and for the next five years was a professor, first of philosophy at the Grand Seminary of Avignon (1851-54), then of dogmatic theology at the Seminary of Nantes (1854-56). In 1856-57 he was curate of St. Sulpice, Paris, being member of the company of the priests of St. Sulpice, and was made honorary canon of Troy. In 1858 he decided upon a monastic life, and made a six-months' novitiate in the Dominican Order (as reformed by Lacordaire); but preferring a more austere order, on April 22, 1862, he entered that of the Barefooted Carmelites (as reformed by St. Theresa and St. John of the Cross in the sixteenth century); rose to be superior of his order in Paris and second definitor of the province of Avignon, and remained in it until September, 1869. From 1861 to 1869 he was metropolitan preacher of Notre Dame de Paris; but refused to be court preacher under Napoleon III., and also to be archbishop of Lyons, always maintaining that his vocation of preacher was preferable to all social or ecclesiastical "preferment." He has preached in the large cities of France (sometimes under great difficulties), England, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and the United States. On Sept. 20, 1869, he published a manifesto against the usurpations of Rome, protesting against the lack of oecumenicity in the convocation of the Vatican Council. At the same time he quitted his convent; and then, to avoid importunity, he went to America for a few months, awaiting the deliberations of the council. When the decree of infallibility was pronounced (July 18, 1870), he found it was impossible for him longer to submit to Rome; and since then he has devoted himself to preaching Catholic reform (the Bible to be read by all, vernacular worship, the cup to be given to the laity, liberty of marriage for priests, freedom of confession), and as far as possible carrying it out in practice. On Sept. 3, 1872, he married in London, Mrs. Emily Jane (Butterfield) Meriman of New York, N.Y., U.S.A., who had been previously engaged in Catholic reform in Rome. In 1873 he began reformed public worship in Geneva, Switzerland, whither he was called by the disaffected Roman Catholics, who elected him their vicar. There he remained five years, but separated himself from the Old Catholics there, because of their too radical tendencies in politics and religion. In 1877 and 1878 he gave a series of conferences in the Cirque d'Hiver in Paris, on the necessity of religious reform in Catholic countries, which was a political event feared by the French Republic. In 1879 he returned to live in Paris, and opened a free church, known as the Catholic Gallican Church, with the episcopal aid of Bishop Herzog of Bern of the Old Catholic Church, and the bishops of the Anglican Church, with which churches his own is in communion. His church was legalized in December, 1883, by a decree of the French Government, signed by President Grevy. It has therefore the right to exist; but it is free, and unsubsidized by the government. In July, 1885, it numbered over a thousand members and six clergy.

In philosophy M. Loyson is a disciple of Plato, Descartes, Malebranche, and Leibnitz. An assiduous investigator of the Holy Scriptures from earliest childhood, his theology is that of the Bible and of the Fathers. Always a devoted, liberal, and evangelical Catholic, he accepts the Primacy of the early Church, but rejects the Papacy. He holds to the faith of the undivided church, i.e., the Episcopate, as expressed in the Nicene Creed, which he believes to be the broad yet firm basis of all social and scientific progress, as well as the adaptation of all spiritual truth; and his aim is the unity (not uniformity) of all Christians.

Among his numerous publications are the following: Poèmes, Pau, 1841, 45; La société civile dans ses rapports avec le Christianisme (Conférences de Notre Dame), Paris, 1867, 5th ed. —; La famille (Conférences de Notre Dame), 1867, 2d ed. —; Éducation des classes ouvrières, 1867; Présentation de la foi Catholique d'une protestante convertie, 1868; De la Réforme Catholique: lettres, fragments, discours, 1869-72, 2d ed. (English trans., Catholic reform: Letters, Fragments, etc., by Madame Loyson, introd. by Dean Stanley, London, 1871); L'Eglise Catholique en Suisse, Geneva, 1875; Réforme Catholique, II. Catholicisme et Protestantisme, Paris, 1873; L'Ultramontanisme et la Révolution, 1873; Trois conférences au Cirque d'Hiver (April 15, 22, and 29, 1877), 1877; Les principes de la Réforme Catholique (Conférences au Cirque d'Hiver, 1878), 1878 (English trans., London, 1879); Programme de la Réforme Catholique, 1879; Librairie Gallicane, 1879, 5th ed. 1883; L'Inquisition, 1882. In 1880 Madame Hyacinthe Loyson translated into French, and he published, Dollinger's Reunion des Eglises. His son, Paul Emmanuel Hyacinthe Loyson, was born at Geneva, Oct. 19, 1873.

Church of Scotland; b. in the manse of Glasford, Lanarkshire, May 11, 1831; graduated at the University of Glasgow (prize-man in theology and philosophy, and historical medallist), 1856; was successively minister of the East Parish, Aberdeen, 1856; Fyvie Parish, Aberdeenshire, 1858; Anderston Church, Glasgow, 1865; Morningside Parish, Edinburgh, 1868; and since January, 1873, of the Barony Parish, Glasgow. He was associated with the earlier movements in the Church of Scotland, for improvement in modes of worship; was appointed in 1871 convener (chairman) of the Church of Scotland committee on correspondence with foreign churches; along with Professor Milligan, was deputy to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States in 1872; was member of the Councils of the Reformed Churches at Edinburgh, Philadelphia, and Belfast. He was the successor of Norman Macleod in the care of the Barony Parish, the largest in Scotland. He is the author of Heaven and Home, Edinburgh, 1879, 3d ed. 1881; The Last Supper of Our Lord, 1881, 2 editions; Life is it Worth Living? London, 1883, 2 editions; and contributed to St. Giles' Lectures for 1881 (The Religions of Central America), and for 1883 (A Historical Sketch of the Church of Scotland); and has published sermons, review articles, lectures, etc.

LANGE, Carl Heinrich Rudolf, Lutheran (Missouri Synod); b. at Polnisch Wartenberg, Silesia, Jan. 8, 1825; graduated at Breslau 1846, and licensed in St. Louis, Mo., 1848; since 1875 has been professor of theology in Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, Mo. He is the author of Lehrbuch der Englischen Sprache, Fort Wayne, Ind., 1870; Kleines Lehrbuch der Englischen Sprache, Chicago, Ill., 1873, 8th ed. St. Louis, 1883; Athanasius, the secret Nic. Syn., Greek text, St. Louis, 1879; Justinus, Apologia, Greek text, 1882.

LANGE, Johann Peter, D.D., United Evangelical; b. on the Bier, a small farm in the parish of Sonnborn, near Elberfeld, Prussia, April 10, 1802; d. at Bonn, July 8, 1881. His father was a farmer and wagoner, and brought his son up in the same occupations, but allowed him at the same time to indulge his passion for reading. He was instructed in the Heidelberg Catechism, which is still used in the Reformed congregations of Prussia, although they are since 1817 united with the Lutheran under the name of the United Evangelical Church. His Latin teacher, the Rev. Hermann Kalthof, who discovered in him unusual talents, induced him to study theology. He attended the gymnasium at Düsseldorf, from Easter, 1821, till autumn, 1822; and the University of Bonn, where he was particularly influenced by Professor Nitzsch, from 1822 till 1825. For a year after leaving the university he was at Langenberg, near Elberfeld, as assistant minister to the Rev. Emil Krummacher (brother of the celebrated Rev. Dr. Frederick William Krummacher), 1825-26; then became successively Reformed pastor of Wald, near Solingen, 1826; of Langenberg, 1828; and of Duisburg, 1832. While at Duisburg, he attracted attention by his brilliant articles in Hengstenberg's Evangelische Kirchenzeitung and other periodicals, by his poems, and by his able work upon the history of the Saviour's infancy (see below) in refutation of Strauss. In 1831, after Strauss had been prevented from taking his professorship of theology in the University of Zurich, Dr. Lange was called to the position. Here he elaborated his Life of Jesus (1831-37, see below), which is a positive refutation of the famous work of Strauss, and had a wide circulation in German and English, and a marked effect upon the large subsequent literature on the subject. He remained in Zurich until 1854, when he was called to a professorial chair in the University of Bonn. In 1860 he became consistorialrath. He labored incessantly as academic teacher and writer, and retained his faculties to the end. He ceased to lecture five days before his death. An American student (Diss.) to whom he showed great kindness, and who informed me of the fact, called, and found him suffering from a cold, but reading and writing as usual, and full of animation and pleasant humor. Even a day before his death, he spoke of the beautiful summer and the beautiful Rhine, and hoped to resume his lectures shortly. "I never saw Lange appear happier than on this day; his eyes were brighter than ever, his countenance was serene, he was all kindness and friendliness, and seemed at peace with the whole world." On the 8th of July he arose as usual, spent the morning among his books, and after dinner, while his daughter went down-stairs to get him his cup of coffee, he quietly fell asleep in his arm-chair, to awake no more on earth.

Dr. Lange was small of stature, had a strong constitution, a benignant face, and bright eye which retained its strength to the last. He was twice happily married, lived in comfortable circumstances, and left a large and interesting family. He was simple in his tastes and habits, of unblemished character, genial, agreeable, full of kindness, wit, and humor, and even in his old age fully alive to all the religious, literary, and social questions of the day. He was at once a poet and a theologian, teeming with new ideas, often fanciful, but always interesting and suggestive. He indulged in poetico-philosophical speculations, and sometimes soared high above the clouds. He was one of the most original and fertile theological authors of the nineteenth century. His theology is biblical and evangelical catholic. His most useful publication is his Bibelwerk, which has probably a larger circulation in Germany and America than any commentary of the same size, and is especially helpful to ministers. He organized the plan, engaged about twenty contributors, and commented himself on Matthew, Mark, John, Romans, Revelation, Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, giving original and brilliant homiletical hints.

He was the author of Die Lehre der heiligen Schrift von der freien und allgemeinen Gnade Gottes, Elberfeld, 1831; Biblische Dichtungen, 1832-34, 2 vols.; Zehn Predigten, 1833; Kleine polemische Gedichte, Duisburg, 1835; Gedichte und Sprüche aus dem Gebiete christlicher Naturbeachtung, 1835; Die Welt des Herrn in biblischen Gesängen, Essen, 1835; Ueber den geschichtlichen Charakter der kanonischen Evangelien, insbesondere der Kindheitsgeschichte Jesu, mit Beziehung auf das Leben Jesu von D. F. Strauss, Duisburg, 1836; Das Land der Herrlichkeit, oder die christliche Lehre vom Himmel, Meurs, 1838; Die Verfassung der Welt, dargestellt in einem Cyklus von Lehrgedichten und Liedern, Berlin, 1838; Grundzüge der urchristlichen frohen Botschaft, Duisburg, 1839; *Homilien über Col. iii. 1-17. LEO XIII., His Holiness the Pope, the two hundred and fifty-eighth successor of St. Peter, Vincenzo Gioacchino Pecci, b. at Carpineto, Anagni, States of the Church, March 2, 1810; educated at the Jesuit colleges of Viterbo (1818-21) and Rome (Collegio Romano, 1821-31), and graduated D.D. 1831. He then entered the College of Noble Ecclesiastics, attended lectures on canonical and civil law in the Roman University, and graduated D.C.L. 1837. His college course was very brilliant. In 1837 he was appointed by Gregory XVI. a domestic prelate, and referendary of the signatura, March 16, 1837; ordained priest, Dec. 23, 1837; was made successively protonotary apostolic, and apostolic delegate at Benevento (where he put down brigandage), Perugia, and Spoleto; archbishop of Damietta, in partibus infidelium, Jan. 17, 1843; papal nuncio to Belgium, 1843-46; archbishop of Perugia, Jan. 19, 1846, and so remained until his elevation to the papacy. On Dec. 19, 1853, he was proclaimed cardinal by Pius IX., and Sept. 21, 1877, created Cardinal Camerlengo of the Holy Roman Church. On the death of Pius IX., Feb. 7, 1878, he acted as pope ad tempus, and superintended all the arrangements for the papal obsequies and conclave. The conclave (Feb. 18, 20, 1878) to choose a new pope was attended by sixty-two cardinals. He received nineteen votes on the first ballot, thirty-four on the second, forty-four on the third; his election was then made unanimous, and he accepted the position, and chose the name Leo. On March 3 he was crowned in the Sistine Chapel. He retains the prefectship of the following sacred congregations: the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition or Holy Office, the Apostolic Visitation, the Consistorial Congregation. On March 1, 1878, he restored the papal hierarchy in Scotland. He has proved himself to be much more liberally minded than Pius IX. was in the latter part of his life; and has shown his scholarly tastes by opening the Vatican to scholars, within certain limits, and by recommending the study of Aquinas. The following are the encyclicals he has issued: (1) Inscrutabili Dei consilio, the inaugural encyclical (April 21, 1878), which shows from history how the Roman Church has been the protectress of all true civilization; (2) Quod Apostolice manus (Dec. 28, 1878), on the dangers which threaten civilization from communism and socialism, and how they should be met; (3) Eterna Patris (Aug. 1, 1879), on the necessity of a restoration of science upon the foundation of the philosophical principles of Thomas Aquinas; (4) Arcanum divina superstitio (Feb. 10, 1880), on the holiness and indissolubleness of Christian marriage; (5) Grande munus (Sept. 30, 1880), on the canonization of Cyril and Methodius; (6) Sancta Dei ecclesia (Dec. 5, 1880), on Roman-Catholic missions; (7) Incarnatum (June 29, 1881), on the origin of the civil power; (8) Insuperat concessum (Sept. 17, 1882), on the third order of St. Francis; (9) Miserere Dei Filium (May 30, 1883), on the rule of the third Seraphic order; (10) Supremi Apostolatus (Sept. 1, 1883), on the rosary of Mary; (11) Nobilissima (Feb. 8, 1884), on the religious affairs of France; (12) Humannum genus (April 20, 1884), on the Masonic "sect"; (13) Immutabili Dei (Nov. 1, 1885), on the position of the Roman Church towards modern governments. He has also issued two briefs, (1) Cum hoc sit (Aug. 1, 1880), on St. Thomas Aquinas, the patron of scholars; (2) Supereminere consideramus (Aug. 13, 1885), on historical studies; and one apostolic letter, Multis Christi (March 12, 1881), appointing an extraordinary jubilee. The complete Latin text of all these is found in the Papal Aetha Leonis XIII., Paris, 1885.

LIGHTFOOT, Right Rev. Joseph Barber, D.D. (Cambridge, 1864; Durham, 1879, D.C.L. (Oxford, 1879), LL.D. (Glasgow, 1879), lord bishop of Durham, Church of England; b. at Liverpool, April 13, 1828; entered Trinity College, Cambridge; obtained a scholarship in 1849; graduated B.A. (wrangler, senior class, and senior metallist) 1851, M.A. 1851; elected fellow of his college, 1852; in 1853 he was Norrisian prizeman. He was ordained deacon in 1851, and priest in 1858. In 1857 he was appointed tutor in his college; in 1858 was select preacher to the University of Cambridge; in 1861 became chaplain to the late Prince Consort, and Hulsean professor of divinity at Cambridge; in 1862, examining chaplain to the bishop of London (Dr. Tait), and honorary chaplain in ordinary to the Queen; in 1866 and 1867 was Whitehall preacher. In 1869, Dr. Tait being elevated to the see of Canterbury, he became one of his examining chaplains, and remained so until 1879. From 1871 to 1879 he was canon residentiary of St. Paul's Cathedral, London; in 1874 and 1875 he was select preacher at Oxford. In 1875 he resigned his Hulsean professorship, and became Lady Margaret professor of divinity, Cambridge, and in the same year deputy clerk of the closet to her Majesty. In 1879 he was recommended by the Earl of Beaconsfield to the then vacant see of Durham, and was consecrated bishop in Westminster Abbey. His remarkable scholarship is shown in his commentaries on Galatians (London, 1863, 8th ed. 1884), Philippians (1868, 7th ed. 1883), Colossians, and Philemon (1875, 8th ed. 1886), and on the Apostolic Fathers, S. Clement of Rome (1869; appendix volume, containing the complete second epistle discovered by Bryennios, 1877), S. Ignatius, and S. Polycarp (1885, 2 vols.). Each of these commentaries contains a revised Greek text, introduction, notes, and dissertations. The last is a peculiar feature of great interest and value. Dr. Lightfoot was one of the original members of the New-Testament Company of Bible Revisers, and wrote On a Fresh Revision of the English New Testament, 1871, 2d ed. 1872 (republished, with permission, by Dr. Schaff, New York, 1873).

McALL, Robert Whitaker, F.L.S., Congregationalist; b. at Macclesfield, Cheshire, Eng., Dec. 17, 1821; studied architecture under Mr. Walters, architect of the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, and Sir Gilbert Scott, R.A.; afterwards turned his attention to theology, and studied in the Lancashire Independent (Congregational and theological) College, Manchester; graduated B.A. at London University in 1847; and for twenty-four years was a Congregational pastor in England, during which time he ministered to four churches. In 1871, while pastor at Hadleigh, Suffolk, he and his wife made a brief holiday visit to Paris, and were so struck with the spiritual destitution of the working classes there, that they resolved to devote themselves to the effort to evangelize them. Accordingly he left his charge, much to its regret, and single-handed they began their mission. Their success has been beyond their hopes. In 1885 there were a hundred stations in Paris and throughout France. The money required to carry on their operations comes from France, Great Britain, and America. See article McAll Mission, in Encyclopædia.

MacARTHUR, Robert Stuart, D.D. He is the regular weekly New-York correspondent of the Chicago Standard, one of the editors of The Baptist Quarterly Review (since 1885), and with Rev. Dr. C. S. Robinson of the Calvary Selection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs, New York, 1879.

McAULEY, Jeremiah (better known as "Jerry McAuley"), layman; b. in Ireland, in the year 1839; d. in New-York City, Sept. 18, 1881. His father was a counterfeiter, who fled the country to escape arrest while his son was an infant. Jerry was brought up by his grandmother, who was a devout Romanist; but he never received any schooling. At the age of thirteen he came to New-York City, and lived with a married sister for a time. Soon he became as great a rogue as one of his years could be. On leaving his sister he boarded in Water Street, and supported himself by stealing from vessels lying in the river. The money procured by selling the articles stolen was spent in all sorts of wickedness. He became a prize-fighter, and a terror and a nuisance in the Fourth Ward. When nineteen years old he was arrested for highway robbery, an offence he had not committed. But he had no one to defend him; and so bad was his character, that he was condemned, in January, 1857, on circumstantial evidence, to fifteen years imprisonment at Sing-Sing. On his way thither he determined to be obedient to prison rules, do the best he could under the circumstances, and trust that somebody would be raised up to help him. He was set at carpet-weaving, and for two years had the approbation of his keepers. For the next three years he was, in consequence of illness, uneasy and intractable, and hence often severely punished, without being anywise improved. On one Sunday, when he had been some five years in prison, Orville Gardner (known as "Awful" Gardner), a former confederate in sin, addressed the convicts, and made a profound impression upon Jerry. On returning to his cell he took down the Bible, with which each cell is supplied, to find a verse which Gardner had quoted. He soon became a constant Bible-reader; and so, although he never found the verse he sought, he stored his mind with the Word of God. A great desire to be saved was awakened within him. But weeks of anxiety and struggle passed before the "words were distinctly spoken to his soul" which assured him that he was forgiven. Then the Lord began to use him in the prison among his fellow-convicts, and several were led to Christ by him. On March 8, 1861, he was pardoned. Like many another one, he had no one to help him to an honest living on leaving prison, so fell back into his former evil courses. He went into the bounty business, and made a great deal of money, which he spent freely. He became a sporting man, and often attended the races. After the war he dealt in stolen and smuggled goods, which he paid for in counterfeit money, until, being found out, no one would steal for him. He then became once more a river thief. But he could not shake off the religious impressions received in prison, although he tried to deaden conscience by drink. This wretched life continued until 1872, when he found Christian friends who manfully stood by him, notwithstanding his frequent falls, until he was confirmed in the Christian life. In October, 1872, he opened his "Helping Hand for Men," at 316 Water Street, as a resort for the forlorn wayfarers, sailors, and others who frequented the locality. From the start the work was remarkably blessed. He manifested extraordinary aptitude for dealing with the degraded. His kindly ways drew them to him; while his simple-minded, whole-hearted piety, and his burning zeal, deeply impressed them. The result was, that many were converted. In 1876 the old building was replaced by a far better one, and the mission incorporated under the title of "The McAuley Water-street Mission." In 1882, feeling that his work in Water Street was done, he began a similar work at 101 West Thirty-second Street, called "The Cremorne Mission," from its contiguity to the notorious Cremorne Garden. In June, 1883, he began the publication of Jerry McAuley's Newspaper, which is still issued every other Thursday. Some time before his death his health began to fail, but he continued his work. His end came suddenly. On Wednesday, Sept. 17, 1884, he had a hemorrhage of the lungs, and on Thursday afternoon at four o'clock another, and in a few minutes he was dead. On Sunday, Sept. 21, at half-past two p.m., he was buried from the Broadway Tabernacle, Thirty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue. The spacious church was crowded in every part long before the services began, and a great multitude stood all around the building. For nearly two hours after the conclusion of the services, the procession of mourners filed past the coffin. In the throng were many of the very classes among whom and for whom his life had been spent,—the criminal, the vicious, the immoral.

By competent testimony and common acknowledgment Jerry McAuley was one of the most useful, remarkable, and indeed wonderful men in the city of New York. Himself for many years a criminal and an outcast, he knew from bitter experience that the way of transgressors is hard. Himself the subject of the Saviour's infinite love, he knew that God had mercy for even the vilest. When, therefore, he spoke to those who had fallen, it was with a thorough knowledge which they could not fail to recognize. His work was, however, not carried on without many hindrances and difficulties; but he triumphed over all. Liberal and wealthy friends supported his enterprises, and in his wife he found a devoted and efficient helper. See Jerry McAuley, His Life and Work, ed. Rev. R. M. O'ford, New York, 1885.

McCABE, Charles Cardwell, D.D. (Central Tennessee College, Nashville, Tenn., 1875, Methodist; b. at Athens, O., Oct. 11, 1836; studied at Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O., but did not graduate; was pastor in the Ohio Conference, 1860-61; chaplain of the 122d Ohio Infantry, 1862-63; was taken prisoner at the battle of Winchester, Va., and was in Libby Prison, Richmond, Va., for four months; on his release rejoined his regiment; agent of the Christian Commission, 1861-65; Centenary agent in Ohio, 1866-67; assistant secretary of the Church Extension Society, 1868-81; missionary secretary since 1881.

McCLELLAN, John Brown, Church of England; b. in Glasgow, Scotland, March 7, 1836; educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1855-58 (elected scholar 1857); graduated B.A. (Wingham gold medalist, and the only double first classical and mathematical honors of his year) 1858, M.A. 1861; was elected fellow of Trinity College, 1859; ordained deacon 1860, priest 1861; was vicar of Bottisham, diocese of Ely, 1861-79; rural dean of first division of Cambridgeshire, 1871-77; since 1880 he has been principal of the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. He is a moderate High Churchman, in favor of discipline and of freedom of the Church. He is the author of Fourth Nocturnal Canon, and Election and Consecration of Bishops, London, 1870; A New Translation of the New Testament, from a critically revised Greek Text, a Contribution to Christian Evidence, vol. 1. (the Four Gospels, with notes and dissertations, and a new chronological harmony) 1875.

McCLOSKEY, His Eminence John, Cardinal, D.D., Roman Catholic; b. in Brooklyn, N.Y., March 10, 1810; d. in New York, Oct. 10, 1885. He was graduated with the highest honors at St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., 1828; ordained priest at New York, Jan. 9, 1831; studied for two years at the Collegium Romanum in Rome, and a year in France. Returning to America in 1837, he was appointed pastor of St. Joseph's Church, New-York City. On March 10, 1841, he was consecrated bishop of Axiere in partibus, and coadjutor to the bishop (later archbishop) of New York (John Hughes); translated to the new see of Albany, May 21, 1847; after the death of Archbishop Hughes (Jan. 3, 1864) he was appointed his successor, May 6, 1864. He attended the Vatican Council (1869-70), and was on the Committee on Discipline. He was by Pius IX. created cardinal priest of the Most Holy Roman Church, March 15, 1875, under the title of "Sacra Maria sopra Minerva." He was the first American cardinal. He received the red hat from Leo XIII. in the consistory held in Rome on March 28, 1878. He enjoyed the respect of Protestant and Roman Catholic alike; and did much for his Church, as by buildings (e.g., the Fifth-avenue Cathedral) and new institutions, and by the introduction of the Capuchins, Franciscans, Sisters and Little Sisters of the Poor, who had previously no houses in his diocese. Under him the number of churches in New York increased from seventy to a hundred and seventy, and the number of clergy from a hundred and fifty to four hundred. Archbishop Gibbons, in his funeral oration, said of him: "He [the cardinal] has left you . . . the legacy of a pure and unsullied life, as priest, bishop, archbishop, and cardinal. He never tarnished the surplice of the priest, nor the rochet of the bishop, nor the pallium of the archbishop, nor the scarlet robes of the cardinal. After spending upwards of half a century in the exercise of the ministry, he goes down to his honored grave without a stain upon his moral character."

He visited the United States in 1860, 1868, and 1879. He is a member of the European Institute of International Law, and of other learned societies. His position in China is of the highest importance. During his long life there he has had several unusual experiences. In 1855 he was captured by Chinese pirates; in 1858 he served as interpreter to the United States minister in negotiating the treaty of Tientsin; in 1859 he ac-accompanied the United-States minister to Peking, and to Yedo, Japan; in 1866 he visited a colony of Jews in Homan, visiting also the tomb of Confucius, and was the first foreigner in recent times to make the journey from Peking to Shanghai by the grand canal (for account of this journey, see Journal North China Branch Royal Asiatic Society, 1866); in the conflict with France, 1881-85, as well as in former disputes, acted as adviser to the Chinese Government on questions of international law, and in 1885 was made a mandarin of the third rank, by imperial decree. In February, 1885, he was elected first president of the newly organized Oriental Society of Peking. Dr. Martin edited The Peking Scientific Magazine from 1875 to 1878 (printed in Chinese); and has written in Chinese, Evidences of Christianity, 1855, 10th ed. 1885 (translated into Japanese, and widely circulated in Japan); The Three Principles (1856), and Religious Allegories (1857), and numerous small tracts which have been widely distributed. In English, besides his correspondence with the learned societies to which he belongs, and his contributions to reviews and other periodicals, he has published The Education and Philosophy of the Chinese, Shanghai and London, 1880, new ed. under title, The Chinese: their Education, Philosophy, and Letters, New York, 1881. In French he has written much. But his largest works have been his translations into Chinese, of Wheaton (1863) and of Woolsey (1875) and Bluntschli (1879) on International Law, Dr. Marten's Guide diplomatique (1871), and the compilation in Chinese of courses of natural philosophy (1896) and mathematical physics (1898).

He was one of the commission of twenty-five appointed by the National Council of Congregational Churches to prepare a statement of doctrine and a catechism (1881-8). He is the author of Historical Manual of the South Church, Andover, 1859; Handbook of the Congregational Churches of California, 1863, 4th ed. 1882; The Religion of Loyalty, Oakland, 1865; The Prominent Characteristics of the Congregational Churches, San Francisco, 1866.

MOODY, Dwight Lyman, Congregational layman; b. at Northfield, Feb. 5, 1837; worked on a farm until seventeen years old, then became clerk in a shoe-store in Boston; joined a Congregational church; in 1855 went to Chicago; during the Civil War was employed by the Christian Commission, and after by the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago as lay missionary. A church was the result of his efforts. This was burned in the great Chicago fire in 1871; but a new one, accommodating twenty-five hundred persons, has since been erected. From 1873 to 1875 he and Mr. L. D. Sankey (see title) held revival meetings in Great Britain, and they have since been associated in revival work upon an extensive scale there again in 1883 and in America. Mr. Moody has published The Second Coming of Christ, Chicago, 1877; The Way and the Word, 1877; Secret Power; or, The Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work, 1881; The Way to God, and how to find it, 1881. Several collections of his sermons have been published; e.g., Glad Tidings (New York, 1876), Great Joy (1877), To all People (1877); Best Thoughts and Discourses with sketch of his life and Sankey's, 1876; also Arrows and Anecdotes (with sketch of life), 1877.

MUELLER, George (originally Georg Friedrich, Plymouth Brother, founder of the Bristol Orphanage; b. at Kropfenstadt, near Halberstadt, Prussia, Sept. 27, 1805. After preliminary training at the Cathedral classical school at Halberstadt, at Heimersleben, under a classical tutor, and at the Nordhausen gymnasium, he entered the University of Halle, 1825. His early life had been careless, even profligate, and his reckless course involved him in pecuniary embarrassments. Once (during the Christmas holidays of 1821) he was imprisoned for debt contracted at a hotel in Wolfenbüttel. He often told deliberate lies. But shortly after entering the university he was converted, and, declining to receive any further support from his father, entered upon that life of faith in the Lord to supply his needs, which has been so remarkable. He determined to become a missionary, and meanwhile manifested his Christian zeal in visiting the sick, distributing tracts, and in conversing upon the subject of religion with persons whom he casually met. In August, 1826, he began to preach, having obtained license to do so in consequence of the very honorable testimonials he brought with him to the university. For two months he lived in Frauke's Orphan House at Halle, in the free lodgings provided for poor divinity students. In March, 1829, having through ill health obtained release from military duty, — an obligation which he had feared would prevent him from accepting the society's appointment received June, 1828, — he went to London to prepare himself for missionary work among the Jews, in the service of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. But after some months of the prescribed study of Hebrew, Chaldean, and German Jewish, he left the society, January, 1830; joined the Plymouth Brethren; became minister at Teignmouth; and married Mary Groves, the daughter of Kitterstrend. Of his own accord he declined to receive any stated salary, abolished pew-rents, and from October, 1830, lived upon voluntary offerings put in the box provided for them in the chapel. This course often reduced himself and wife to great straits; but by prayer and simple faith their wants were always ultimately relieved. In 1832 he became pastor of Gideon Chapel, Bristol. Impressed by the number of destitute children he found in Bristol, he prayed for divine guidance in doing something for them. Being led thereto, as he believed, he collected the children at 8 A.M., gave them a piece of bread for breakfast, then taught them to read, and read the Bible to them for about an hour and a half. But the plan not working well, he abandoned it, and in 1831 started "The Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad," which was designed to assist day-schools, Sunday schools, and adult-schools; to circulate the Holy Scriptures; to aid missionary work; to board, clothe, and educate scripturally, whole orphan children. The institution, he decided, should have no patron but the Lord, no workers but believers, and no debts. Up to 1881 it had provided for the education of 95,113 children and grown persons in its schools; circulated over 1,000,000 copies or portions of the Bible; spent £396,633, 12s. 5d. on missionary work; and trained up 6,892 orphans at a cost of £661,186, 9s. 2d. It is still flourishing. He then asked the Lord to give him a suitable house for the orphan children, assistants for the work, and a thousand pounds in money. And he was heard. Provided with assistants and money, he hired a house on Wilson Street, Bristol, and opened his orphanage on April 11, 1836. A second house was opened about eight months after the first. By June, 1837, he had received the asked-for thousand pounds. He then opened a third house; a fourth, March, 1841. He then bought a site on Ashley Down, near Bristol, and put up the first building, 1846. There are now there five immense orphan houses, containing over two thousand inmates. The last one was opened in 1869. In February, 1870, his wife, who had so faithfully joined him in all his enterprises, died. After a time he re-married. Besides managing his orphanages and the institution, and preaching to his congregation, he has also taken missionary tours through the British Isles, the United States (going across the continent) and Canada (1877). In 1881 he visited the East, and in 1882 India. As is well known, he does not in the ordinary way advertise any of his enterprises. But the circulation of his Life of Faith: Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, first issued in 1847, and continued in 1844, 1844, and 1856, which has been reprinted in repeated editions in New York, translated into German (Stuttgart, 1844, 2 parts), and into French (Paris, 1848), and other books and pamphlets published under his auspices, secures public attention to them. It remains true, however, that the Orphanage has no endowment, and none of the usual machinery of support. Mr. Müller looks to God to supply the daily food of the thousands of children therein gathered, and to pay all the expenses of their care. Results have justified his confidence. Money comes in, sometimes at very critical moments, and the work is sustained. Besides the Narrative above referred to, Mr. Müller has published Hebrew Mapudæ; Addresser, London, 1876; Præaching Tours, 1883, etc. — Cf. Mrs. E. R. PHILLIPS, George Müller, London, 1885.

MULFORD, Elisha, LL.D. (Yale College, New Haven, Conn., 1872), Episcopalian; b. at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Penn., Nov. 19, 1833; d. at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 9, 1885. He graduated from Yale College, New Haven, Conn., 1855; studied theology at Union Theological Seminary, New-York City, at Andover, Mass., and in Halle and Heidelberg; was ordained deacon 1859, priest 1862; had charges at Darien, Conn., 1861; South Orange, N.J., 1861-64; Friendsville, Penn., 1877-81. From 1861 to 1877 he was without charge at Montrose, Penn.; after 1881 he resided at Cambridge, where he lectured in the Episcopal Divinity School. He wrote The Nation, the Foundation of Civil Order and Political Life in the United States, New York, 1870, 9th ed. 1884; The Republic of God, an Institute of Theology, 1881, 7th ed. 1885.

The main feature of Dr. Mulford's theology, as presented in his Republic of God, is the union of the utmost liberty of philosophic thought with Christian dogmas. He urges the personality of God as the central principle of the universe, but in a form so comprehensive and elevated as to seem no longer incompatible with that conception of Deity, to which modern thought is approximating, of an infinite energy diffused throughout the universe, from whom all things proceed, and in whom they consist. The nature as well as the possibility of a revelation is based upon the postulate, that humanity is endowed potentially with personality as it exists in God. Revelation is the manifestation of the Divine personality in history, finding its highest and absolute expression in Christ. The organic relation of Christ to humanity involves the principle of the solidarity of the human race. Individualism, which has been a ruling idea in Protestant theology, is subordinated to the conception of man as essentially and primarily a member of the race from which in his history and fortunes he cannot be detached. The redemption in Christ extends to humanity as a whole, and is emphasized as an accomplished fact, as constituting a great objective epoch in man's spiritual history. It consist in ransoming man from bondage to the order of nature, and elevating him into the life of the spirit. While Dr. Mulford's thought is monistic, every trace of dualism or root of evil stronger than the love of God being disowned in virtue of the efficacy of the Incarnation, yet he affirms the reality and the deep significance of the conflict in human experience, finding its origin in the opposition between nature and spirit, not between matter and spirit as it is sometimes popularly represented. The Incarnation witnesses that the law of the course and constitution of nature has no dominion in the sphere of the spiritual; death, which reigns supreme in nature, is not the law of the spirit; the suffering in the kingdom of nature is transmutated by Christ into the principle of self-sacrifice, the essential condition of spiritual life and growth. In this struggle between the natural and the spiritual, humanity is supported by the indwelling Spirit of God, so that the course of human history becomes a process in which humanity is increasingly convicted of sin and of righteousness and of judgment. The judgment is interpreted, with the prophets of the Old Testament, as a constituent factor of life, whose result is purification and restoration. And this result is a necessary consequence of all judgment, whether here or hereafter, whether temporary or final; for death does not break the continuity of the spiritual order, and resurrection is not postponed to a distant future, but is immediate. But the "last things" naturally find no extensive treatment in a theology whose object is to enforce the reality of the life of the spirit in humanity, in this present world. To this life of the spirit, the Bible, the church, and the sacraments bear witness, by this also becoming divine agencies in the education of the race; but they are the symbols of a spiritual order, and not to be identified with the order itself. The Bible witnesses to a revelation, but is not the revelation; sacraments witness to a divine process of purification and feeding, but are not themselves the process; the church bears witness to a life of the spirit in humanity, which goes beyond its boundaries as an organization. So strong is the emphasis laid upon this point,—the reality of the life of the spirit,—that Dr. Mulford has devoted to it a chapter which he regarded as the most important in his book, entitled Christianity not a Religion and not a Philosophy, in which he disclaims the formalism of the one, and the tendency to abstraction of the other. It was the burden of his teaching and conversation, that revelation was co-efficient with the reason; that it was through experience, but not from experience; that theology was the interpretation of life,—an appeal to life closing every theological argument; that the true centre of theology must be the living, present God, not theories about him, not covenants or attributes or doctrines of anthropology. His thought has much that resembles Erskine and Maurice; and, as in the case of the latter, the difficulty in understanding him springs mainly from what is distinctive in his theology, rather than from obscurity of style. Among German theologians he was most indebted to Rothe, with whom he asserts the continuousness of the Incarnation, the abiding presence of the spiritual or essential Christ as distinguished from the historical Christ. With Hegel he maintains that principle of realism, which was also characteristic of the great theologians of the scholastic age, that the highest and necessary thought of man is identical with reality; as in the condensed expression which sums up his argument for the existence of God,—“the idea of God is in, with, and through the being of God.” But apart from his kinship with these and other thinkers, his work in theology has a character of its own. It was meditated and conceived in that inspiring epoch in American history which drew from him his first book, The Nation. As in that treatise he carried theology into statesmanship, finding in the solidarity of the state a divine personality, so in his later work he carried the national principle into theology, expanding the idea of the nation into the Republic of God, — the solidarity of mankind in the incarnate Christ.

NEVIN, John Williamson, D.D. (Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Penn., 1839), LL.D. (Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., 1873, Reformed (German); b. in Franklin County, Penn., Feb. 20, 1803; graduated at Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., in 1821, and at Princeton (N.J.) Theological Seminary in 1826, where from 1826 to 1828 he taught Hebrew as substitute for Dr. Charles Hodge, who had gone to Europe to study. During the following year he was stated supply at Big Spring, Penn. From 1829 to 1840 he was professor at Allegheny in the Western Theological Seminary. He then followed a call to the theological seminary of the Reformed (German) Church at Mercersburg, in which he taught theology from that time (1840) until 1851. He was also president of Marshall College, Mercersburg, Penn., from 1841 to 1853, and of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, 1866 to 1876, when he retired to Caernarvon Place, near Lancaster, Penn., where he died June 7, 1886. He was one of the founders of the "Mercersburg theology," for which see the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia, ii., 1173 sqq. He edited The Mercersburg Review from 1849 to 1853, and wrote the largest part of its contents himself. Of the articles contributed by him to the Review then and subsequently, especially noteworthy are the following: Doctrine of the Reformed Church on the Lord's Supper, in Reply to Dr. Charles Hodge of Princeton, 1818; The Apostles' Creed: Origin, Constitution, and Plan, 1849; Early Christianity, 1851; Cyprian, 1852; Dutch Crusade, 1854; Review of Dr. Hodge's Commentary on Ephesians, 1857; Introduction to the Tercentenary Edition of the Heidelberg Catechism, 1863; The Liturgical Question, 1863; Validation of the Revised Liturgy, 18—; Answer to Professor Dorner, 1865; Revelation and Redemption, 18—. In book form have appeared from him, Biblical Antiquities, Philadelphia, 1828, 2 vols., revised ed. 1849, reprinted Edinburgh, 1853; The Anxious Bench, Chambersburg, Penn., 1842; Dr. Schaff's The Principle of Protestantism, translated with introduction and appendage, 1845; The Mystical Presence, Philadelphia, 1846; History and Gains of the Heidelberg Catechism, Chambersburg, 1847; Antichrist, or the Spirit of Sect and Schism, New York, 1848.

NEWMAN, Albert Henry, D.D. (Mercer University, Macon, Ga., 1885), LL.D. (South-Western Baptist University, Jackson, Tenn., 1883), Baptist; b. in Edgefield County, S.C., Aug. 25, 1852; graduated at Mercer University, Macon, Ga., 1871, and Rochester (N.Y.) Theological Seminary, 1875; studied Oriental languages in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Greenville, S.C. (now Louisville, Ky.), 1875-76; became acting professor of church history in Rochester (N.Y.) Theological Seminary, 1877, and professor 1880; professor of church history and comparative religion in the Baptist (Theological) College, Toronto, Ontario, Can., 1881. His theological position is conservative. He translated (with additional notes) Immer's Hermeneutics of the New Testament, Andover, 1877; and has written numerous newspaper and review articles.

NEWMAN, Francis William, LL.D., layman; b. in London, June 27, 1805; educated at Worcester College, Oxford; graduated B.A. (double first-class), 1826; was fellow of Balliol, 1826-30, but resigned because unable conscientiously to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles, which was then requisite before obtaining a master's degree. From 1830 to 1834 he lived and travelled in the East; became classical tutor at Bristol College, 1834, and in Manchester New College, 1840; professor of Latin in University College, London, 1846. He resigned in 1863, and has since devoted himself to literature. He is the brother of Cardinal Newman, and, like him, has left the Church of England, in which he was born, but, unlike him, he has thrown away all religious belief. His writings are numerous. Of theological interest are, History of Hebrew Monarchy, London, 1847; The Son, its Son, and its Spirit, 1849; Phases of Faith, Past and Present, 1850; From Atonement to Atonement, 1850; Unbelief, 1851; Unbelief towards a Church of the Future, 1854; Theism, Dogmatism and Practice, 1858.

NEWMAN, His Eminence John Henry, cardinal-deacon of the Roman Catholic Church; b. in London, Feb. 21, 1801; educated at Trinity College, Oxford; graduated B.A. (second class in classics), 1820; in 1822, fellow of Oriel College; in 1825, vice-principal of St. Alban's Hall; in 1826, tutor of his college; in 1828 became incumbent of St. Mary's, Oxford, and chaplain of Littlemore in the neighborhood. He resigned his tutorship in 1832, but retained his incumbency until 1843, standing in the highest esteem for his noble mental and moral qualities, and wielding a great influence upon the undergraduates. He stood with Pusey as recognized leader of the High Church party. He engaged in the production of the Tracts for the Times, and wrote No. 90 (the last of the series), which appeared March, 1841, in which he endeavored to show how the Thirty-nine Articles may be interpreted in the Roman-Catholic sense. In 1842 he established at Littlemore a kind of monastery, of which he was head for three years. At length, in 1845, he took the step to which his avowed principles logically led him: seceded to the Church of Rome, and entered her priesthood. He was in 1847 appointed to found the Oratory of St. Philip Neri, in England; in 1854, rector of the newly founded Catholic University at Dublin; resigned in 1858, and returned to Birmingham to take charge of a school for the sons of Roman-Catholic gentry at Edgbaston, near that city. On May 12, 1879, Pope Leo XIII. created him a cardinal-deacon of the Holy Roman Church. A collected edition of his writings appeared in London, 1870-79, 36 vols.; these include Poor-church and Plain Sermons, 8 vols.; and three other volumes of sermons; five volumes of miscellanies; two religious novels, Loss and Gain, or The Story of a Convert, 1841; Callista, a Sketch of the Third Century, 1855; his autobiography, Apologia pro vita sua, 1864; Avians of the Fourth Century, 1833; Lectures on Justification, 1835; Two Essays on Biblical and on Ecclesiastical Miracles, 1843; Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine, 1845; Difficulties of Anglicans, 1850, 2 vols.; Essay in Aid of the Grammar of Assent, 1870. He wrote "Lead, kindly Light," and other hymns. Cf. JENNINGS: Story of Cardinal Newman's Life, London, 1882.

NEWMAN, John Philip, D.D. (Rochester Seminary, N.Y., 1861), LL.D. (Wesleyan University, Athens, Tenn., 1882); b. in New-York City, Sept. 1, 1829; graduated at Cazenovia Seminary, 1848; entered the ministry of the Methodist-Episcopal Church, 1848; was editor of The New-Orleans Advocate, 1866-69; pastor of the Metropolitan Methodist-Episcopal Church, Washington, D.C., 1869-72, 1875-78; and chaplain to the United-States Senate, 1869-75. He visited Greenland in 1870. In December, 1873, he was appointed by President Grant inspector of United-States consulates, and in this capacity made a tour of the world, 1873-74. From 1882 to 1884 he preached in the Madison-ave. Congregational Church, New-York City. He was Gen. Grant's pastor, 1869-85. He is a member of the British Society of Biblical Archaeology. He is the author of From Dan to Beersheba, or The Land of Promise as it now appears, New York, 1861; The Thrones and Palaces of Babylon and Nineveh, from the Persian Gulf to the Mediterranean, 1876; Sermons preached in the Metropolitan Church, Washington, D.C., 1876; Christianity Triumphant, New York, 1881.

NEWTN, Samuel, D.D. (Glasgow, 1875). Congregationalist; b. in London, Feb. 15, 1821; graduated at London University, B.A. 1841, M.A. 1842; was pastor at Broseley, Salop, 1842; professor of classics and mathematics, Western College, Plymouth, 1845; of mathematics and ecclesiastical history, New College, London, 1851; and since 1872 has been principal and professor of New-Testament exegesis and ecclesiastical history. He was a member of the New-Testament Revision Company, 1870-81; and chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, 1889. He is the author of Elements of Mechanics, London, 1850, 6th ed. 1879; First Book of Natural Philosophy, 1851, 10th thousand 1885; Mathematical Examples, 1859, 3d ed. 1871; Memoir of Rev. Alfred North, 1876; Lectures on Bible Revision, 1881.

NEWTON, Richard, D.D. (Kenyon College, Gambier, O., 1845), Episcopalian (Low Church); b. in Liverpool, Eng., July 25, 1813; graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, 1836, and at General Theological Seminary, New-York City, 1839; became rector of St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia, 1840; of Church of Epiphany, 1862; of Church of the Covenant, 1882. He has published twenty-three volumes in all; some of these have been translated into more than twenty different languages; they are mostly discourses to children and youth. Of those recently issued may be mentioned, Parables from the East, Stories and Incidents from Bible History, Philadelphia, 1881; Cocoon Names and Privileges, New York, 1882; A Bible Portrait-Gallery, Philadelphia, 1885; Heroes of the Reformation, 1885.

PHILLIPS, Philip, Methodist layman; b. in Chautauqua County, N.Y., Aug. 13, 1834; brought up on the farm of a neighbor; early attracted attention by his singing, received his first musical education at the country singing-school, and later from Dr. Lowell Mason; began his first singing-school at Alleghany, N.Y., in 1853; conducted such schools subsequently in adjacent towns and cities. His parents were Baptists, and he was one himself from 1852 to 1860; but in 1860 he and his wife (whom he had married that year) joined the Methodist Church at Marion, O., and have ever since been in that denomination. He brought out his first musical publication, Early Blossoms, in 1860, and sold twenty thousand copies of it. In 1861 he moved to Cincinnati, and opened a music-store. His next book, Musical Leaves, Cincinnati, 1862, sold to the extent of seven hundred thousand copies. During the war he entered vigorously into the work of the Christian Commission, and raised much money for it by his Home Songs, and his personally conducted "services of song" in different parts of the country. He then issued The Singing Pilgrim, and since other books. In 1866 his music-store in Cincinnati was burned, and he moved his business to New York. In 1868 he first visited England, and successfully held services of song in all parts of the United Kingdom. He prepared The American Sacred Songster for the British Sunday-school Union, of which eleven hundred thousand copies have been sold. He has since held his praise and Bible-reading services in all parts of the world. He is the only man who has belted the entire globe with his voice in song, conducting 571 services during the journey. See PHILIP PHILLIPS: Song Pilgrimage around and throughout the World, with biographical sketch by Alexander Clark, Chicago, 1880, London, 1883.

PRIME, Edward Dorr Griffin, D.D. (Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Penn., 1857), Presbyterian; b. at Cambridge, N.Y., Nov. 2, 1814; graduated at Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., 1832, and at Princeton (N.J.) Theological Seminary, 1838; was pastor at Scotchtown, N.Y., 1839-51; American chaplain at Rome, winter of 1854-55; since 1853 has been co-editor of The New-York Observer. He has published Around the World, New York, 1872 (several editions); Forty Years in the Turkish Empire (memoirs of Dr. William Goodell), 1875, 6th ed. 1883.

PRIME, Samuel Irenæus, D.D. (Hampden Sidney College, Va., 1854) Presbyterian; b. at Ballston, Saratoga County, N.Y., Nov. 4, 1812; d. while on a vacation trip, at Manchester, Vt., Saturday, July 18, 1885. He was educated in the academy at Cambridge, N.Y., and at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.; graduated from the latter, 1829; and studied theology at Princeton (N.J.) Theological Seminary, 1832-33. He ever afterwards remained a firm friend and active supporter of his literary and of his theological alma mater. He was pastor at Ballston Spa 1833-35, and at Matteawan, N.J., 1837-40. He became editor of The New-York Observer in 1840, and continued to occupy this position till his death, being at the same time the chief proprietor of this old and influential family paper, which is read in all parts of the United States, as well as in many reading-rooms of Europe. He was for some time corresponding secretary and one of the directors of the American Bible Society, corresponding secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, president of Wells College, and a trustee of Williams College. He took an active and leading part in all the affairs of the Presbyterian Church, and in the Christian and philanthropic enterprises of the age. He repeatedly visited Europe. He wrote a number of books which had an extraordinary circulation at home and abroad (see list below). Among these we mention Travels in Europe and the East; The Bible in the Levant, The Alhambra and the Kremlin; Life of Samuel F. B. Morse, the Irenæus Letters (from The New-York Observer); and especially the Power of Prayer (1859, enlarged 1873); and Prayer and its Answer (1882). The Irenæus Letters are unique, and show an extraordinary faculty of clothing every-day topics and experiences with a fresh interest, and extracting from them lessons of practical wisdom. He left a third series, of an autobiographical character, which were published after his death (in The New-York Observer, 1886).

Dr. Prime was an indefatigable worker till within a few days of his death; and hardly a week passed without one of his Irenicus Letters, so highly prized by the readers of the Observer. His health, however, began to fail some years before his death.

With the Evangelical Alliance of America, founded in 1866, he was closely identified almost from the beginning. He attended the fifth General Conference at Amsterdam in 1867, read there the report on Religion in America, prepared by the late Dr. Henry B. Smith, and extended an invitation to the European Alliances to hold the sixth General Conference in the city of New York. The invitation was cordially accepted. On his return from Europe, he was elected one of the corresponding secretaries of the American Alliance, and served it in that capacity without any compensation till Jan. 28, 1881. He took a very prominent share in the preparations for the great New-York Conference, which, after two vexatious postponements, was held in the autumn of 1873. It is still well remembered as the first international and inter-continental religious meeting in America, and its influence for good reached every country on the globe. He advocated the cause of the Alliance, — which is the cause of Christian union and religious liberty, — in The Observer, and at many public meetings. He was very active in the anti-Romish controversy.

Dr. Prime was a wise counsellor, a man of an uncommon amount of common-sense, executive ability, and sound judgment, of quick wit, rich humor, and a hopeful temperament. He was eloquent in speech, and had a fluent, easy, and racy pen. Possessed of a generous heart, strong convictions, and large catholicity, he was one of the leaders of public opinion, and, altogether, one of the most untiring and useful writers and workers of his age and country. His genial humor, generous sympathy, and inexhaustible fund of illustrations and anecdotes, made him one of the most agreeable of friends and companions; and his company will long be missed in the social circles which he used to grace and delight with his presence.

On account of growing infirmities, he resigned his active secretaryship of the Evangelical Alliance, Jan. 28, 1881; but continued to attend the meetings regularly, and accepted the appointment of honorary corresponding secretary, which was offered him unanimously at the seventeenth annual meeting, Jan. 26, 1885. After his death a special meeting was called on Monday, July 27, where a suitable paper, prepared by Dr. King, was presented, adopted, and entered on the minutes. — And on Tuesday, Jan. 5, 1886, an interesting memorial service in his honor was held at Association Hall, New York City, in which Rev. Drs. R. S. Storrs (Congregationalist), E. Bright (Baptist), and J. M. Buckley (Methodist) made appreciative addresses to a large representative audience. See report in The New-York Observer, Jan. 11, 1886.

Many of his publications were anonymous; but he was the acknowledged author of the following volumes, most if not all of which have passed through several editions: The Old White Meeting-house, or Reminiscences of a Country Congregation, New York, 1815; Life in New York, 1815; Annals of the English Bible, abridged from Anderson, and continued to the Present Time, 1819; Thoughts on the Death of Little Children, 1830; Travels in Europe and the East, 1835; Power of Prayer (history of the Fulton-street prayer-meeting, New-York City), 1839; The Bible in the Levant; or, the Life and Letters of the Rev. C. N. Righter, Agent of the American Bible Society in the Levant, 1859; Letters from Switzerland, 1860; Memoirs of the Rev. Nicholas Murray, D.D. (Kirwan), Boston, 1862; Five Years of Prayer (in the Fulton-street prayer-meeting) with the Answers, New York, 1864; Walking with God, Life hid with Christ, 1872; Songs of the Soul, gathered out of many Lands and Ages, 1873; Alhambra and the Kremlin, Journey from Madrid to Moscow, 1873; Fifteen Years of Prayer in the Fulton-street Prayer-meeting, New York, 1873; Under the Trees, 1873; Life of Samuel F. B. Morse, 1875; Prayer and its Answer illustrated in the first Twenty-five Years of the Fulton-street Prayer-meeting, 1882; Irenicus Letters, 3 series 1882 (with portrait), 1885 (with sketch of Dr. Prime's life), 1886 (containing his autobiography in the form of letters).

Since 1861 he has been Camden professor of ancient history to the university; since 1872, a canon of Canterbury; since 1873, proctor in convocation. Canon Rawlinson is a moderate High Churchman, but anxious in no way to narrow the liberty of opinion which has historically been claimed and allowed within the Anglican communion. In politics he is a moderate (or Conservative) Liberal. He supported Mr. Gladstone in all his Oxford contests, and received his canonry from the Crown on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone as prime minister. In the elections of 1885, however, he found himself unable to support the (advanced) Liberal candidates. He is well known as a speaker in the Convocation of Canterbury, at church congresses, and elsewhere. Besides numerous articles in reviews and magazines (Contemporary, Princeton, etc.), in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, Cassell's Bible Educator, and in ninth edition Encyclopædia Britannica, commentaries on Kings, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther in The Bible (Speaker's Commentary 1872-73; on Ezra in Bishop Eliott's Commentary (1882), and on Ezra, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther in The Pulpit Commentary (1880-82), he is the author of The History of Herodotus, a new English version with copious notes (in conjunction with Sir Henry Rawlinson and Sir Gardner Wilkinson), London, 1858-60, 4 vols., 5th ed. 1881; The Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Records (Bampton lectures), 1859, 2d ed. 1860; The Contrasts of Christianity with Heathen and Jewish Systems (in nine sermons), 1861; The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World, 1862-67, 4 vols., 2d ed. 1870; A Manual of Ancient History, Oxford, 1870, 2d ed. 1880; Historical Illustrations of the Old Testament, London, 1871; The Sixth Great Oriental Monarchy (Parthia), 1873; The Seventh (the Sassanians), 1876; St. Paul in Damascus and Arabia, 1877; The Origin of Nations, 1878; A History of Egypt, 1881, 2 vols.; The Religions of the Ancient World, 1882; Egypt and Babylon from Scripture and Profane Sources, 1884.

RIGGS, Elias, D.D. (Hanover College, Ind., 1833), LL.D. (Amherst College, Mass., 1871), Presbyterian; b. at New Providence, N.J., Nov. 19, 1810; graduated at Amherst College, Mass., 1829, and at Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., 1832; was missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. in Greece (at Athens and Argos, 1832-38; in Smyrna, Asia Minor, 1838-53; since that in Constantinople. He has made but one visit to the United States (in 1856). Being detained in New York for electrotyping an Armenian Bible, he taught Hebrew in the Union Theological Seminary (1857-58), and was invited to become professor in that department. The translation of the Scriptures into the Turkish language, after having engaged the labors of many others, was in 1873 placed by the British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society in the hands of a committee consisting at first of the Revs. W. G. Schauffler, D.D. (of the American Bible Society, formerly of the A. B. C. F. M.), George T. Herriek, Elias Riggs, D.D. (of the A. B. C. F. M.), and Robert H. Weakley (of the Church Missionary Society), as a result of whose labors, and those of native Turkish scholars, the entire Bible was published in both Arabic and Armenian characters in 1878. Experience having shown the need of retouching this version in a way to render it more intelligible to common readers, the same Bible societies, in 1883, consented to the organization of a larger committee (comprising so far as practicable the members of the former committee), and placed this work in their hands. The revised Turkish version, the work of this large committee, was issued 1886. Dr. Riggs is the author of A Manual of the Chaldean Language, containing a Grammar (chiefly translation of Winer), Chrestomathy, and a Vocabulary, Andover, Mass., 1832 (revised edition, New York, 1858, and since several editions); The Young Forester, a Brief Memoir of the Early Life of the Swedish Missionary Fjellstedt (Massachusetts Sabbath-school Society); Grammatical Notes on the Bulgarian Language, Smyrna, 1811; Grammar of the Modern Armenian Language, with a Vocabulary, Smyrna, 1817, second edition, Constantinople, 1850; Grammar of the Turkish Language as written in the Armenian Character, Constantinople, 1856; Translation of the Scriptures into the Modern Armenian Language, completed with the aid of native scholars, Smyrna, 1853 (reprinted in many editions in Constantinople and New York); Translation of the Scriptures into the Bulgarian Language, completed with the aid of native scholars throughout, and on the New Testament of the Rev. Dr. Albert L. Long (now professor in Robert College), Constantinople, 1871 (several editions, Constantinople and Vienna); A Harmony of the Gospels (in Bulgarian), Constantinople, 1880; A Bible Dictionary (in Bulgarian), 1881; minor publications, such as tracts, hymns, and collections of hymns, in Greek, Armenian, and Bulgarian.

He is one of the founders and honorary secretaries of the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance; and was sent three times (1869, 1872, 1873) as commissioner to Europe to make arrangements for the sixth General Conference of the Alliance, which, after a second postponement in consequence of the Franco-German war, was held in New-York, October, 1873. He was also one of the Alliance delegates to the emperor of Russia in 1871, to intercede with him in behalf of the religious liberty of his subjects in the Baltic provinces, and prepared the official report. He was sent as a delegate to the General Conference of the Alliance at Basel (1879), and at Copenhagen (1881). He attended, as a delegate, the meeting in London which organized the Alliance of the Reformed Churches in 1875, and its first General Council in Edinburgh, 1877; and was chairman of the programme committee for its second General Council in Philadelphia, 1880 (in behalf of which he made the arrangements in Europe). He is president of the American Bible-revision Committee, which he organized in 1871 at the request of the British Committee; and he was sent to England in 1875 to negotiate with the British revisers and university presses about the terms of co-operation and publication of the Anglo-American Revision. He attended several meetings of the British Committee in the Jerusalem Chamber, London, the last in July, 1881. In 1877 he made a tour through Bible lands, in 1884 through Scandinavia and Russia, in 1886 through Spain, France, and Germany.

(all Strassburg, 1831, 1835, and 1836, respectively), Swiss Protestant theologian; b. at Plainpalais, near Geneva, Oct. 4, 1810; d. in Geneva, June 18, 1885. He was educated at the University of Strassburg and at Bonn, where he studied Oriental languages under Freytag. On his return to Geneva he founded (1836) a society for the exegetical study of the New Testament, which lasted until 1841; and gave free lectures upon Old-Testament exegesis in the university. From 1840 to 1861 he was pastor at Chêne-Bougeries; from 1862 to 1861 lectured upon Old-Testament introduction in Geneva University, where, from 1872 to his death, he was professor of Old-Testament exegesis. He made a trip through Palestine in 1873. His fame rests upon his translation of the entire Bible (Old Testament, Geneva, 1871, 2 vols.; New Testament, 1880, many subsequent editions), which he prepared at the request of the Venerable Company of Pastors of Geneva. It is a remarkably successful work. It was reprinted by the Oxford University Press, first edition fifty thousand copies. His other works are, Ruth, Geneva, 1831; Le léviaste, 1835; De voce Scholæ et notione Oræ apud Hebræos, 1835; De la nature de l'inspiration chez les auteurs et dans les écrits du Nouveau Testament, 1836; Monopistes (trans. from Schleiermacher), 1837, 2d ed. 1861; L. M. l'abbé de Bayle sur son dernier ouvrage, 1838; Tratado de la escritura de los libros hebreos, 1841, 2d ed. 1871; Scriptures christiennes, 2d series 1850, 3d series 1871; Géographie de la Terre Sainte, 1851; Catholicisme, ou Manuel d'instruction chrétienne, 1858, 2d ed. 1863; Rechts bibliques d'usage de la messe, 1862 (twenty-four thousand copies sold); Souvenir pour mes anciens catholiques (four discourses), 1861; Chrestomathie biblique, 1864; Le prophète Esaié, 1866; Les rois de la sainte messe (ordination sermon), 1866.

professor of history at Munich, 1816; deposed and expelled from the city 1817, for his political opinions; re-instated, 1850; retired, 1867. He has been prominent in politics. He is the author of Das Leben Jesu, Regensburg, 1842-46, 5 vols., 2d ed. 1853-62, 6 vols.; Das Heidenthum und dessen Bedeutung für das Christenthum, 1853, 3 parts; Jerusalem und das Heilige Land, Schaffhausen, 1862-63, 2 vols., 2d ed. 1872-74; Thaten und Lehren Jesu mit ihrer weltgeschichtlichen Bedeutung, 1864; Geschichte des Apostel vom Tod Jesu bis zur Zerstörung Jerusalems, 1865, 2d ed. 1866; Kritische Reformentwürfe, beginnend mit der Revision des Bibelschemas, Munich, 1870; Das Hebräer Evangelium, 1870; Deutschland und der Palästina, 1872; Gottes neue Zeitwissen, Nordlingen, 1877; Morbfahrt nach Tyrus zur Ausgrabung der Kathedrale mit Barbuchaus Grab, 1878.

SERVICE, John, D.D. (Glasgow, 1877), Church of Scotland; b. at Campsie, Feb. 26, 1833; d. in Glasgow, March 15, 1881. He studied at the University of Glasgow irregularly from 1858 to 1862, but did not take a degree; was sub-editor of Mackenzie's Imperial Dictionary of Universal Biography, under P. E. Dove; married in 1859; became minister at Hamilton 1862, and there remained for ten months, when he resigned on account of ill-health, and went to Melbourne, Australia, where he spent two years (1861-66), leaving it for Hobart Town, Tasmania, where he was minister four years (1866-70). In both these colonial charges he exercised a considerable influence. In 1870 he returned home, and in 1872 was appointed to the parish of Inchi, Wigtonshire, which he left in 1879 for Hyndland Established Church, Glasgow, of which he was incumbent when he died. His first literary work of mark was a novel, known as Nocantia when it was published in Good Words, and afterwards as Lady Betty, London, 1875, 3 vols. It is full of interesting pictures of Scotch village and rural life, in vivid contrast with wider colonial experiences. The hero is a Scotch clergyman; and the charm of the book lies, not so much in its plot, as in the fresh views of life under the varied conditions which had fallen to the author's lot. His volume Salvation, here and hereafter: Sermons and Essays (1876, 1th ed. 1885) gave him at once a foremost place among the leaders of what is known as the "Broad Church" in Scotland. Occasional magazine articles, journalistic contributions, and sermons appeared from his pen from time to time; but Salvation, here and hereafter, has only been followed by two posthumous volumes, — Sermons (1884) and Prayers (1885). — in both of which there is the same note of vigorous unconventionalism of opinion, and of deep spiritual life, which has arrested attention in his previous volumes. His personal influence was one element of his power, and the secret of its charm is easily understood from his books.

WILLIAM JACK.

SEWALL, John Smith, D.D. (Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., 1878), Congregationalist; b. at Newcastle, Me., March 20, 1830; graduated at Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., 1850; was commander's clerk, United-States Navy, in China, and in Commodore Perry's expedition (1853-54), 1850-51; graduated at Bangor (Me.) He supervised the Greek text, and translated a portion never before rendered into English, of Fulton's Index Canonum, New-York, 1871; Introduction to Papal Claims, 1882; many sermons, addresses, essays, and charges.

SHAFTESBURY, the Right Hon. Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Seventh Earl of, K.G., D.C.L. (Oxford, 1841), Church of England, layman; b. in London, April 28, 1801; d. at Folkestone, Oct. 1, 1885. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford; graduated B.A. (first-class in classics) 1822, M.A. 1832; sat as Lord Ashley in the House of Commons, as member for Woodstock 1828-30, Dorchester 1830, Dorsetshire 1831-46, Bath 1847-51, when he succeeded his father in the peerage, and took his seat in the House of Lords. He supported the governments of Liverpool and Canning; was commissioner of the board of control under Wellington; was Lord of the Admiralty in Sir Robert Peel's administration of 1841-55, but declined to join it in 1841 because Peel would not support the Ten-hours Bill. It was not, however, as a statesman and politician that Lord Shaftesbury distinguished himself, but as a leader in philanthropy and religion. Throughout his long lifetime he labored assiduously for the benefit of the working-classes, among whom he was a great favorite; visiting them in their homes, and planning measures for their relief and elevation by reducing their hours of labor, improving their workshops, factories, and lodging-houses, caring for their children, and guarding them against vice. He was a consistent opponent of slavery, and a firm friend of the United States during the late civil war. In religious affairs he was a pronounced Evangelical, and the leader of that party in the Church of England. He was called upon to preside at innumerable meetings in Exeter Hall, and elsewhere, on behalf of all sorts of enterprises. His name was synonymous with every virtue, and a household word in Great Britain. He was president of many religious and philanthropic societies. Among them may be mentioned, The Church Pastoral Aid Society, The Surgical Aid Society, Field Lane Refugees and Ragged Schools for the Destitute and Homeless Poor, Ragged-school Union, The Victoria Institute, Society for the Conversion of the Jews, Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews, The British and Foreign Bible Society. His funeral was held on Thursday, Oct. 8, in Westminster Abbey, and was attended by enormous crowds. Thousands stood outside in the drenching rain, unable to enter. Delegations came from the different societies which owed to him their prosperity, if not their existence. Noticeable among them was that of the Shoe-black Brigade. Upon his coffin the wreath from the Crown Princess of Germany lay side by side with one from the poor flower-girls of London. He was buried at the family seat of St. Giles, Dorsetshire.

SHAW, William Isaac, Methodist; b. at Kingston, Can., April 6, 1811; graduated at Victoria University, Cobourg, Can., A.B. 1861, LL.B. 1861, at McGill University, Montreal, M.A. 1880; entered the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Canada 1861, and after thirteen years' pastoral work became (1877) professor of exegesis and church history in the Wesleyan Theological College, Montreal. He is the author of Discussion on Retribution, Toronto, 1881; and various contributions to reviews.

SHEDD, William Greenough Thayer, D.D. (University of Vermont, Burlington, 1876), LL.D. He translated from the German of Therenin, Eloquence a l'Étude, New-York, 1850, 2d ed. Andover, 1859; and Guericke's Manual of Church History, Andover, 1860-70, 2 vols.; and has written A History of Christian Doctrine, New-York and Edinburgh, 1865, 2 vols., 8th ed. 1881; Homilies and Pastoral Theology, 1867, 8th ed. 1881; Sermons to the Natural Man, 1871, 3d ed. 1881; Theological Essays, 1877; Literary Essays, 1878; Commentary on Romans, 1879; Sermons to the Spiritual Man, 1881; The Doctrine of Endless Punishment, 1886.

SHELDON, Henry Clay, Methodist; b. at Martinsburg, N.Y., March 12, 1815; graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., 1837, and at the Theological School of Boston University, Mass., 1871; studied at Leipzig, 1871-75; since 1875 has been professor of historical theology in Boston University. He is anti-Romish, but not anti-Catholic, with a leaning to evangelized Arminianism, as opposed both to strict Calvinism and to Liberalism. He is the author of History of Christian Doctrine, New-York, 1886, 2 vols.

SHEPHERD, Thomas James, D.D. (Columbian College, now Columbian University, Washington, D.C., 1865), Presbyterian; b. in the vicinity of Berryville, Clarke County, Va., April 25, 1818; graduated at Columbian College, Washington, D.C., 1839, and at the Union Theological Seminary, New-York City, 1843; was pastor of the Harmony Presbyterian Church, Lisbon, Md., 1843-52; of the First Presbyterian Church, Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, Penn., 1852-81, since pastor emeritus. He was associate editor of the American Presbyterian (new school newspaper), Philadelphia, 1856-61. He is the author of History of First Presbyterian Church, Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, Philadelphia, 1861, new ed. (supplemented by an account of his pastorate), 1881; Sacred Hymn and Tune Book, 1865; Westminster Bible Dictionary, 1880, 2d ed. 1885.

SHERATON, James Paterson, D.D. (Queen's University, Ontario, Can., 1882), Episcopal Church in Canada; b. at St. John, N.B., Nov. 29, 1811; graduated at the University of New Brunswick, B.A. (with honors, gold medalist) 1862; studied theology in the University of King's College, Windsor, N.S., privately with the bishop of Fredericton; was ordained deacon 1861, priest 1865; became rector of Shediac, N.B., 1865; of Pictou, N.S., 1871; principal and professor of exegetical and systematic theology in Wycliffe College, Toronto, 1877. He became a member of the senate of the University of Toronto in 1885. He was editor of The Evangelical Churchman from 1877-82, since 1882 principal editorial contributor. He is the author of numerous essays on education, the church, the ministry, Christian unity, etc.

SHERWOOD, James Manning, Presbyterian; b. at Fishkill, N.Y., Sept. 29, 1811; educated mainly through private tutors; studied theology under Rev. George Armstrong at Fishkill, N.Y.; was pastor at New Windsor on the Hudson, N.Y., 1835-40; Mendon, N.Y., 1840-45; Bloomfield, N.J., 1852-58; editor of National Preacher and Biblical Repository, New-York, 1846-51; Eclectic Magazine, 1861-71; founder and editor of Hours at Home (monthly), 1865-69, editor Presbyterian Review, 1863-71; Presbyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review, 1877-78, Home-eto Review, since September, 1883. During his thirty years of editorial life he has been extensively engaged as a "reader" of manuscripts for publishing-houses, and has critically noticed for the press several thousand volumes, chiefly in the reviews of the country. He is the author of Plot for the Old Foundations, New York, 1856; The Lamb in the midst of the Thorns, or the History of the Cross, 1883, 2d ed. 1884; editor of Memoirs, and two volumes of Sermons of Rev. Ichabod Spencer, D.D., 1855; Brainerd's Memoirs, with new preface, notes, and lengthy introduction on his life and character, 1881. He has in press, 1886, a book entitled Books and Authors, and how to use them.

SHIELDS, Charles Woodruff, D.D. (College of New Jersey, Princeton, 1861), LL.D. (Columbian University, Washington, D.C., 1877, Presbyterian; b. at New Albany, Ind., April 4, 1825; graduated at the College of New Jersey, Princeton, 1844, and at Princeton Theological Seminary, N.J., 1847; became pastor at Hempstead, Long Island, N.Y., 1849; of Second Church, Philadelphia, Penn., 1850; professor of harmony of science and revealed religion in the College of New Jersey, Princeton, 1866 (he projected the first such college professorship). His theological standpoint is Presbyterian, but (1) advocating the restoration of the Presbyterian Prayer Book of 1661 for optional use by any ministers or congregations which desire a liturgy; and (2) also advocating church unity on a liturgical basis, with the hope of an ultimate organic re-union of Presbyterianism with Congregationalism and Episcopacy in the American Protestant Catholic Church of the future. He has published Philosophia ultima, Philadelphia, 1861; The Book of Common Prayer as amended by the Presbyterian Divines of 1661, 1861, 2d ed. While bishop of Louisville he built a magnificent cathedral in that city. He was at the First Plenary Council of Baltimore, May, 1852, and successfully advocated the erection of the see of Covington. In November, 1852, he obtained in Belgium Xaverian Brothers for the parochial schools of Louisville, Ky., and from Archbishop Zuyssert of Trecht several priests and sisters to instruct deaf-mutes. In 1855 he had a famous debate with George D. Prentice of the Louisville Journal, upon the Know-nothing Movement. Bishop Spaulding was the author of D'Aubigny's History of the Reformation abroad, Baltimore, 1811, 2d ed. London, 1816; Dublin, 1818 (subsequently enlarged and re-issued as History of the Protestant Reformation in Germany and Switzerland, and in England, Ireland, Scotland, the Netherlands, France, and Northern Europe, Louisville, 1860, 2 vols., 5th ed. Baltimore, 1875); Sketches of the Early Catholic Missions in Kentucky, 1787-1827, Louisville, 1846; Lectures on the General Ecclesiastical of Catholicity, 1817, 6th ed. SPURGEON, Charles Haddon, Baptist; b. at Kelvedon, Essex, Eng., June 19, 1834. He is the grandson of Rev. James Spurgeon, for many years pastor of the Independent Church at Stambourne, Essex, and son of Rev. John Spurgeon, who was also an Independent minister, and who until 1876 was pastor of the Independent Church, Upper Street, Islington, London. When just old enough to leave home, he was removed to his grand father's, and there remained until 1841, when his father placed him in a school at Colchester, where he acquired a fair acquaintance with Latin, Greek, and French, and led his class at every examination. In 1818 he spent a few months in an agricultural college at Maidstone, conducted by a relative. In 1819 he became usher in a school at Newmarket kept by a Baptist. He then began to attend the Baptist Church. On Dec. 15, 1850, when home for a holiday, he was converted in the Colchester Primitive Methodist Chapel, under the preaching of an individual unknown, who chose for his text Isa. xlv. 22, emphasizing the words, "Look . . . and be saved;" which words were exactly suited to relieve the mind of young Spurgeon, who had been for some time under profound conviction of sin, and who looked and was saved. He was immersed at Isleham, on Friday, May 3, 1851, and thus formally left the Independent connection in which he had been brought up. His works at once attracted his faith. He commenced distributing tracts and visiting the poor in Newmarket. He addressed the Sunday-school children in the vestry of the Independent chapel. He wrote Antichrist and her Brood, in competition for a prize for an essay on popery. No prize was awarded, but he received a handsome gift from Samuel Morley as an encouragement. In 1851 he became usher in a school at Cambridge, entered the "Lay-preachers Association" in connection with the Baptist Church meeting in St. Andrew's Street, Cambridge, and the same year preached his first sermon from 1 Pet. ii. 7, at Teversham, a village four miles from Cambridge. He was then a boy of sixteen years, and wore a round jacket and broad turn-down collar. His success was so great that he was encouraged to hold evening services, after his school duties were over, in villages around Cambridge and Waterbeach; and thus he did in thirteen stations, preaching sometimes in a chapel, sometimes in a cottage, or in the open air. In 1852 he became pastor at Waterbeach, and during the two years he was there the membership increased from forty to nearly a hundred. His father and others strongly advised him to enter Steyney (now Regent's Park) College to prepare more fully for the ministry. A meeting with Dr. Angus, the tutor, was arranged at the house of Mr. Macmillan, the publisher, at Cambridge; but although the two parties were in the house at the same time, through the failure of the servant to announce Mr. Spurgeon, Dr. Angus was not aware of his presence, and returned to London without seeing him. The college scheme was then given up. His address at the anniversary of the Cambridge Union of Sunday Schools, in 1853, greatly impressed a gentleman, who on the strength of it recommended him as a candidate for the then vacant Baptist Church of New Park Street, Southwark, London; and, after preaching for three months on probation, the small opposition to him when he first came had entirely vanished, and he accepted, April 28, 1854, a unanimous call to become their pastor. The church had been very prosperous, but had so dwindled down that only one hundred persons attended Mr. Spurgeon's first service, while the building seated twelve hundred. Before three months had passed, the chapel was crowded; within a year, it was necessary to enlarge it, and he preached in Exeter Hall during the progress of the alterations. But the enlarged building could not accommodate the crowds; and in 1856 he preached at the Royal Surrey Gardens Music Hall, which seated seven thousand persons. On Aug. 16, 1859, the cornerstone of the new Metropolitan Tabernacle was laid, and the building opened for service March 25, 1861. It seats about five thousand persons, with standing room for a thousand more; cost thirty-one thousand pounds, and was entirely paid for by the end of the opening five weeks' services. When the church removed from New Park Street, in 1861, it numbered eleven hundred and seventy-eight members; there were in 1885 upwards of fifty-five hundred. Mr. Spurgeon's only children, twin sons, are both preachers,—one in England, the other in New Zealand.

Besides preaching, not only in his own church twice every Sunday and on Thursday evening, and discharging the other duties of his pastorate, Mr. Spurgeon manages two important enterprises, the Pastors' College and the Stockwell Orphanage. Shortly after the commencement of his London pastorate, he gave his personal attention to the theological education of Thomas William Medhurst, a man of his own age, now a pastor at Lambport; but finding that his time was too fully occupied to undertake the extra labor, he put Mr. Medhurst under the care of Rev. George Rogers, an Independent minister, who was long the principal and theological tutor of the Pastors' College. Other students soon presented themselves. These were at first assembled every week in Mr. Spurgeon's house for instruction in theology, pastoral duty, and other practical matters. From 1856 to 1861 the other lectures were delivered by Mr. Rogers in his own house; from 1861 to 1871, in the class-rooms under the Tabernacle; since 1871 in the New College buildings. Mr. Spurgeon lectures to the students every week.

The Stockwell Orphanage was incorporated in 1867, with an endowment of twenty thousand pounds, given by Mrs. Hillyard; and fifty orphan boys were taken in the following year. It now consists of twelve houses, and accommodates nearly five hundred children of both sexes, from six to fourteen years old. [Stockwell was formerly a suburb of London, but is now included in its limits.]

In connection with the church there are a Colportage Association (started in 1866, which through paid colporteurs sells religious books in neglected villages), and Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund (1876), the latter to supply poor ministers with free gifts of valuable books.

Mr. Spurgeon's remarkable constitution yielded, at length, to the tremendous strain of his manifold and multifarious duties and burdens, and since 1867 he has had frequent attacks of illness. In order that the interests of the church might not suffer, his brother, the Rev. James Archer Spurgeon, has been since 1868 co-pastor.

Mr. Spurgeon's pen has been very busy. Aside from his private correspondence, and that arising out of his various enterprises, he has each year since 1857 issued Spurgeon's Illustrated Almanac (containing short articles by him and others); in 1861 and 1862 was joint editor with Revs. D. Katerns and W. G. Lewis of The Baptist Magazine, has personally conducted since Jan. 1, 1865, The Sword and the Trowel, a monthly magazine, in which he writes copiously, and which is in the interest of his church and of religion generally; since 1872, John Ploughman's Almanac, and has written the works mentioned below, and done much literary work besides. His first printed sermon, entitled Harvest Time, appeared in the Penny Pulpit, October, 1851; the second, God's Providence, shortly afterwards, and so a dozen before the end of the year. From the first week of 1855 one has been issued every week. Each of these receives his revision. The average sale is twenty-five thousand copies weekly. A few have approached a hundred thousand copies; two have exceeded it; and one on Baptized Repentation, preached in the summer of 1861, sold to the extent of a hundred and ninety-eight thousand copies, and was the occasion of a great controversy on the subject. The sermon Pictures of Life and Birthday Reflections, in relation to his twenty-first birthday, is accompanied by his portrait, the first issued, and shows that he was then pale and thin.

His works embrace a great number of published sermons, more than nineteen hundred; e.g., in The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit (containing his sermons which have been published weekly since the close of 1851), London, 1855 sup., vol. i. 1855, vol. xxxi. 1885; The Pulpit Library, 1856 58, 3 vols.; Types and Emblems, 1875; Tennent's Calls to Christian Energy, 1875; The Present Truth, 1883 (these three volumes are made up of his Sunday and Thursday evening sermons); Four Sermons, (nineteen discourses on farming), 1882; and the following, which together with the above have been reprinted in New York, translated into different languages, and circulated in thousands of copies; The Saint and his Saviour, 1857; Smooth Stones taken from Ancient Brooks (sentences from Thomas Brooks), 1859; Morning by Morning, or Daily Readings for the Family or the Closet, 1866, 100th thousand 1885; Our Own Hymn Book (used in many churches, has several original hymns and paraphrases of Psalms), 1866; Evening by Evening, or Readings at Eventide for the Family or the Closet, 1868, 75th thousand 1885; John Ploughman's Talks, or Plain Advice for Plain People, 1869, 340th thousand; The Treasury of David (containing an original exposition of the book of Psalms, a collection of illustrative extracts from the whole range of literature, a series of homiletical hints upon almost every verse, and lists of writers upon each psalm; in the preface to each successive volume, he acknowledges fully and heartily the important assistance rendered him by several persons in the researches necessary to carry out his plan), 1870-85, 7 vols. (thousands of copies sold, reprinted in United States); Features for Farmers, or Illustrations for Preachers and Teachers, from my Note-Book, 1870, 26th thousand 1885; The Interpreter, or Scripture for Family Worship (with running comments and suitable hymns), 1872; Lectures to my Students (a selection from addresses delivered to the students of the Pastors' College, Metropolitan Tabernacle), 1st series 1875, 30th thousand 1885; 2d series 1877, 16th thousand 1885; Concluding and Commencement (two lectures to his students, with a catalogue of Bible commentaries and expositions), 1876; The Metropolitan Tabernacle: its History and Work (with thirty-two illustrations), 1876; John Ploughman's Pictures, or More of his Plain Talk for Plain People, 1880, 110th thousand 1885; Illustrations and Meditations, or Flowers from a Pastoral's Garden, described and dispensed, 1883; The Clue of the Maze, 1881; My Sermon Notes (a selection from outlines of discourses delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle), 1881-87, 1 vols. (covering the whole Bible); Storm Signals (sermons), 1886; many minor works, articles, etc.

SYDOW, (Karl Leopold) Adolph, Ph.D., German Protestant; b. at Charlottenburg, Nov. 23, 1800; d. in Berlin Oct. 22, 1882. He studied at Berlin from 1819 to 1823, and became an ardent disciple of Schleiermacher. In 1824 he became repentant; in 1828, preacher and ordinary teacher of the cadet corps at Berlin. In 1836 he was called by Frederick William III. to Potsdam as court preacher, and enjoyed also the friendship of Frederick William IV., who sent him in 1841, with others, to Great Britain, to study in London and elsewhere the ecclesiastical arrangements. In consequence he became a defender of the free church system; thus forfeited the king's favor, gave up his position at court, went in 1846 to Berlin as preacher of the New Church, and so remained until he was made emeritus in 1876. In 1872 he was deposed by the Brandenburg consistory, because in a public lecture he declared that Jesus was the legitimate son of Joseph and Mary. He appealed to the upper church council: twenty-six ministers of the province of Brandenburg and twelve of Berlin protested against his deposition; the theological faculty at Jena declared to Dr. Falk, the minister of religious affairs, that his deposition would "endanger the liberty of teaching;" and the council, while sharply rebuking him, ordered his reinstatement on the ground that the objectionable statement was extra-official. See Sydow's Uitenstuck, Berlin, 1873. He made, with F. A. Schulze, a translation of Channing's works, Berlin, 1850-55, 12 vols. His other publications consist of sermons, etc. See M. Sydow: Dr. A. Sydow. Ein Lebensbild, Berlin, 1885. •

Buttmann's Grammar of the New-Testament Greek*, 1873, last ed., 1883; and with revision and enlargement the 2d ed. of Grimm's Wilke's Clavis Novi Testamenti, under title, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament, New York, 1886.

THIERSCH, Heinrich Wilhelm Josias, D.D., Irvingite; b. in Munich, Bavaria, Nov. 5, 1817; d. at Basel, Dec. 3, 1885. He studied philology at Munich, chiefly with his father, an eminent Greek scholar; and theology at Erlangen and Tübingen; became privat-docent at Erlangen, 1839; professor of theology at Marburg, 1843; resigned in 1850, in order to labor in the interest of the "Catholic Apostolic Church," which then began to be organized in Germany by "Evangelists" from England. He had charge of a small Irvingite congregation at Augsburg, and afterwards at Basel. He was connected by marriage with the Zeller family of Benggen, and with Bishop Gobat of Jerusalem, who married a sister of his wife.

Dr. Thiersch was a man of sincere and profound piety, of rare classical, theological, and general culture, an enthusiastic teacher, and might have become the successor of Neander in Berlin; but, in obedience to what he believed to be a divine call, he sacrificed a brilliant academic career to his religious convictions. He lived in poverty and isolation. He was lame; but had a very striking, highly intellectual and spiritual countenance, and an impressive voice and manner. He was the most distinguished German convert to Irvingism. He sincerely believed that the Lord had restored the offices and gifts of the Apostolic Church in the Irvingite community; and, notwithstanding the apparent failure of the movement, he adhered to it till his death.

His chief writings are, Versuch zur Herstellung des historischen Standpunkts für die Kritik der neustamentlichen Schriften, Erlangen, 1815, a very able book against the Tübingen school of Baur, who answered in Der Kritiker und der Enkrate, in der Person des Herrn Heinrich W. J. Thiersch, Zur Charakteristik der neuesten Theologie, Stuttgart, 1816; Vorlesungen über Katholicismus und Protestantismus, Erlangen, 1816, 2 vols. (very able, written in an ironic spirit, and in elegant style); Die Kirche im apostolischen Zeitalter, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1822, 3d ed., 1879 (English trans. by Carlyle the Irvingite, London, 1852); Ueber christliches Einnichichen, 1834, 7th ed., 1877; Döllinger's Auffassung des Verhältnisses betrachtet, 1861; Die Gesinnung Christi, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1867, 2d ed., 1875; Die Begründung Christi, Basel, 1867, 2d ed., Augsburg, 1878; Die Strafgesetze an Bayern zum Schutz der Sittlichkeit, 1868; Luther, Gustav Adolf und Max I. von Bayern, Nordlingen, 1868; Das Verbot der Ehe innerhalb der neuen Ewigigkeit nach der heiligen Schrift und nach den Grundsätzen der christlichen Kirche, 1869; Die Genesis, Basel, 1869 (English trans., The Book of Genesis, London, 1878); Ueber den christlichen Staat, 1873; Christian Heinrich Zeller's Leben, Basel, 1876, 2 vols.; Die Anfänge der heiligen Geschichte, nach dem 1. Buche Moses betrachtet, 1877; Ueber die Gefahren und die Hoffnungen der christlichen Kirche, 1877, 2d ed., 1878; Blicke in die Lebensgeschichte des Propheten Daniel, 1884; Inbegriff der christlichen Lehre, 1886 (his last work, which was published after his death, and contains a manual of Christian doctrine and Christian life which he used in his catechetical instruction). PHILIP SCHAFF.

THOMAS, David, D.D. (Waynesburg College, Penn., 1862; Congregationalist; b. at Hollybush-Vatson, near Tenby, Pembrokeshire, South Wales, Feb. 1, 1813; educated at Newport Pagnel, now Chesham College, Buckingham, under the Rev. T. Bull, the friend and neighbor of Cowper the poet; entered the Independent ministry, 1841; was minister of Stockwell Independent Church, London, 1845-74. He founded in 1855 the National Newspaper League Company, for cheapening and improving the daily press, which numbered ten thousand members, and of which he was chairman; also the Working Men's Club and Institute Unions, 1861; originated the University for Wales in 1862, when the first letters and resolutions were sent out; the University College was opened at Aberystwith, March 11, 1877. He comes of an old family who have resided upon the same property for upwards of three hundred and fifty years. His grandfather lived to a hundred years; great-grandfather to a hundred and twenty years; great-uncle to a hundred and twelve years. He is a Broad Churchman, in close theological sympathy with Horace Bushnell of United States of America, Dean Stanley of Westminster, F. W. Robertson of Brighton, and Bishop Fraser of Manchester. In all his writings he recognizes the fact, that as Christ is the only revealer of absolute truth, he is not to be interpreted by the Old-Testament writers or by the apostles, but they are all to be interpreted by him. He is the author of The Crisis of Being, London, 1849; The Core of Creeds, 1851; The Progress of Being, 1851; The Tabernacle Liturgy, 1855; Journalism and the Pulpit, 1857; Unconsciousness of People in Relation to the Pulpit, 1857; Resurrections: Thoughts on Duty and Destiny, 1863; The Genius of the Gospel: a Homiletical Commentary on St. Matthew, 1861; The Augustan Hymn-Book, 1865; The Minister, the Parson, and the Church: Inaugural Addresses, Bristol, 1866; The Philosophy of Happiness (including Crisis and Progress of Being), London, 1869; Homiletic Commentary on Acts of the Apostles, 1869; The Practical Philosopher: a Daily Monitor, 1873; Prophetic Mundi, the Book of Job considered, 1878; editor of The Homilist, 1851-82; 50 vols.; and since of The Homilistic Library, in which have appeared his Book of the Psalms, a critically and practically considered, 1882-83, 3 vols.; The Genius of the Fourth Gospel, 1881.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, D.D. (University of Chicago, 1866), Baptist; b. at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; graduated at Kenyon College, Gambier, O., 1850; was admitted to the bar in Illinois, 1852; studied in Rochester Theological Seminary, N.Y., 1853-54; obliged to abandon his studies through ill health, he engaged in mercantile pursuits at Chicago, Ill.; in 1862 he entered the Baptist ministry, and was pastor at Waukegan, Ill., 1862-64; of the Pierpont-street Church, Brooklyn, N.Y., 1864-68; of the First Church, San Francisco, Cal., 1868-69; of the Michigan-avenue Church, Chicago, 1869-74; has been pastor of the First Baptist Church of Brooklyn, N.Y., since 1874. TULLOCH, Very Rev. Principal John, D.D. (St. Andrew's, 1851), LL.D. (Glasgow and Edinburgh, 1881), Church of Scotland; b. near Tibermair, Perthshire, June 1, 1823; d. at Torquay, Eng., Feb. 13, 1885. He was educated at St. Andrew's and Edinburgh; became parish minister at Dundee 1845, and at Keltins, Forfarshire, 1849; principal and primarius professor of divinity in St. Mary's College, St. Andrew's University, 1851; and senior principal of the university, 1860. His theological standpoint was thus defined by himself: "Broad evangelical. The aim is to see all Christian truth first in its pure historical form,—the mind of Christ, the thought of St. Paul, the teaching of St. James; then its living relation to the Christian consciousness,—what man needs, what God gives. The historic method, rightly applied, is the primary key to all Christian truth; and the renovation of theology is through this method bringing all Christian ideas freshly into the light of consciousness." He studied theology in Germany in 1847-48 and 1863-64. He was especially attracted by Neander, and much interested by the problems raised by the Tübingen school and the writings of F. C. Baur, and greatly attracted in later years by Dean Stanley's historical writings and Bishop Lightfoot's critical-historical essays.

He was an ardent student of literature and philosophy, and his writings are very highly prized. He first came into notice when in Dundee, by his frequent contributions in the Dundee Advertiser; but later by his elaborate articles in The North-British Review, The British Quarterly, and Kitt's Journal of Sacred Literature. Two of his articles—one on Carlyle's Life of Scurling (North-British Review, vol. iv., 1855), the other on Bunsen's Hopyolitus (the same, vol. xix., 1853)—attracted wide attention; and the latter so pleased Baron Bunsen that he successfully exerted his influence to press the claim of Mr. Tulloch to the then vacant principalship in St. Mary's College. His appointment when barely thirty years old to this position, one of the most dignified and responsible connected with the Established Church of Scotland, was naturally a great surprise and occasion of unfavorable remark. But he soon proved his superior fitness for the office. In 1856 he was appointed one of the examiners of the Dick bequest, and so continued until his death. In 1858 he was deputed by the General Assembly of the Church to formally open the Scotch Presbyterian Church in Paris, and preached there during the summer. In 1859 he was appointed one of her Majesty's chaplains for Scotland, and often preached before the Queen at Crathie. In 1862 he became deputy clerk of the General Assembly, in 1875 succeeded Rev. Dr. Cook of Haddington as clerk, and in 1878 was elected moderator. The regard in which he was held, and the position he occupied, are authoritatively expressed in the following memorial passed by the senatus of the University of St. Andrew's immediately after his death:—

"The senatus record their deep sense of the severe loss the university has sustained in the death of its honored and revered head,—the Very Rev. Principal Tulloch, who for thirty-two years held the offices of principal and primarius professor of divinity in St. Mary's College, and for twenty-six years the office of senior principal in the university. During the whole of this period,

Principal Tulloch devoted himself to the interests of the colleges and university with unwearied zeal and energy; and the successful management of university affairs under critical circumstances was largely due to his wisdom and tact, his sound public judgment, commanding influence, and great executive ability. As chairman of the university council, Principal Tulloch's thorough knowledge of academic questions, and capacity for directing their discussion into useful channels, were equally conspicuous. As vice-chancellor, Principal Tulloch represented the university on public occasions with unflinching dignity and distinction. As a permanent member of the university court, his knowledge of official procedure, and scrupulous care and impartiality in dealing with judicial questions, were, in its early years, of the greatest service in helping to define the powers, and develop the functions, of the newly established tribunal; while to the end they constituted an important element in guiding the deliberations of the court, and giving weight to its decisions. As a university reformer, Principal Tulloch combined an enlightened regard for the past with the keenest perception of the newest forces and requirements of social and national life. Having carefully studied the university system of the country, and been familiar with its working for nearly half a century, he was supremely anxious that any changes initiated by the universities, or undertaken by the legislature, should be fully considered in the interest of the public, so as to extend the usefulness, and strengthen the national position, of the universities. While keeping up the standard of attainment, he felt that it was desirable to give greater elasticity to the curriculum, and thus make the whole system more widely fruitful in solid educational results. As a member of the Central Board of Education, Principal Tulloch was engaged for several years in the re-organization and extension of primary schools, and in various efforts for the multiplication of good secondary schools. The removal of so able, earnest, and experienced an adviser and authority is a heavy loss, alike to the universities of which Principal Tulloch was the senior representative, and to the educational interests of the country at large. The senatus cannot but feel, indeed, that the calamity they mourn affects every department of the nation's higher life.

"The Church of Scotland has lost in Principal Tulloch her most eloquent and courageous leader; her wisest and most far-sighted statesman; her most accomplished, large-hearted, and generous-minded representative. The loss falls with almost equal weight on Scottish thought, Scottish literature, and Scottish public life,—in all of which Principal Tulloch was deeply interested, and in all of which he took so active and so influential a part. But it is in relation to the higher and more distinctive work of his life as a Christian thinker and constructive theologian, that Principal Tulloch's death will be most widely felt and deeply mourned. His profound religious convictions, the spiritual elevation of his thought, his living sympathy with the past as affording light and guidance for the present, his powers of luminous insight and interpretation, the breadth of his literary culture, and his command of a graceful and impressive style—all conspired to give Principal Tulloch's matured studies in Church history and Christian philosophy a unique character, a high and permanent value. This has been widely recognized on both sides of the Atlantic,—wherever, indeed, the English language is spoken. Critics and thinkers of widely different schools have felt and acknowledged how much Principal Tulloch's writings have done to harmonize the principles of religious life with the movements of modern thought, and thus to bring the spirit of Christianity into closer relation with the spirit of the age. In this aspect of his work, Principal Tulloch's death in the plenitude of his powers cannot but be regarded as a serious national loss. Alike, therefore, in the variety and extent, the high character and lasting value, of his labors, the senatus feel that Principal Tulloch will occupy a foremost place in the history of the time, and has shed an undying lustre on the university he adorned. In placing on record this slight tribute to his worth, the members of the senatus cherish with pride and gratitude the inspiring example of their late principal's noble character and life, and will ever hold in affectionate regard the memory of his generous nature, his goodness of heart, the warmth and fidelity of his attachments, his loyal and kindly qualities as a colleague and a friend."

Principal Tulloch was the author of Theism (second Burnett prize essay), Edinburgh, 1855; Leaders of Reformation, 1859, 3d ed. 1883; English Protestants and their Leaders, 1861; Beginning Life, 1862, 15th thousand 1880; The Christ of the Gospels, and the Christ of Modern Criticism (against Renan), 1864; Rational Theology and Christian Philosophy, 1872, 2 vols., 2d ed. 1873; Facts of Religion and Life (sermons preached before the Queen), 1876; Pascal, 1876, 2d ed. 1882; The Christian Doctrine of Sin, 1877; Modern Theories in Philosophy and Religion, 1884; Movements of Religious Thought in Britain during the Nineteenth Century, 1885; numerous contributions to the newspaper-press and to the reviews.

WALDENSTRÖM, Paul Petter, Swedish Lutheran Church; b. at Luleå, a town in the northern part of Sweden, July 20, 1838; graduated as Ph.D. at the University of Upsala 1863; ordained 1864; became head master of gymnasium at Umeå 1864, and of that at Gefle 1874. He came into conflict with Lutheran Orthodoxy in 1872, upon the doctrine of the atonement, in regard to which he holds that the reconciliation through Christ is of us to God, not of God to us; not per gratiam propter Christum salvatio, but propter gratiam per Christum. The subject is God, the Father of Christ; the source is the love of God; the object is the whole world; the mediator is Christ, the only begotten God, the Son of God; the end is the restitution of men to God, not the redemption of God to men. His subsequent writings in defence of his position have excited great interest, and stirred up a great controversy. He is also a leader in the Free-Church movement in Sweden, and in consequence frequently prosecuted by the Upsala Consistory. He resigned his clerical position in the State Church in 1880. For baptizing two children in September, 1884, he was prosecuted by the Consistory, but by appeal to the king he was cleared. He is a member of the Swedish Parliament. [His eloquence renders him an attractive and powerful preacher, and the Free-Church movement owes much to him. See M. W. MONTGOMERY, A Wind from the Holy Spirit in Sweden and Norway, New York, 1884.] Of his numerous and highly popular writings, all in Swedish, may be mentioned, Sermons over the New Pericopes of the Swedish Church, Stockholm, 1868-80, 4 vols.; The Lord is Holy, 1875 (reprinted in Chicago, Ill.), and translated into German (Leipzig, 1877); The Eternal Decree of Election, 1880 sqq., 3 vols.; The History of Infant-Baptism; The New Testament, newly translated, with Notes, 1883 sqq.

WARREN, Israel Perkins, D.D. (Iowa College, Grinnell, Io., 1868), Congregationalist; b. at Bethany, Conn., April 8, 1814; graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., 1838; principal of Cromwell (Conn.) Academy, 1838-39; studied at Yale Theological Seminary, 1839-40; became pastor at Granby, Conn., 1842; Mt. Carmel, Conn., 1846; Plymouth, Conn., 1851; corresponding secretary of American Seamen's Friend Society, New-York City, 1856; secretary and editor of the American Tract Society, Boston, 1859; editor and book publisher in Boston, 1870; editor of The Christian Mirror, of Maine, October, 1875; editor and proprietor of the same, Portland, Me., April 1, 1877. In 1859, when the controversies on slavery, which at length eventuated in the civil war, were at their height, the American Tract Society of Boston withdrew from its connection with the society of the same name at New York, and commenced a distinct publication work of its own. Mr. Warren, who had had some editorial experience in connection with his work for seamen, was chosen secretary of the Boston society, in charge of its publication department. In this capacity he served eleven years, until May, 1870, when, the causes which led to the separation of the two societies having disappeared, it was deemed advisable to re-unite them, and transfer the publishing work and material of the Boston society to that of New York. During this period a very large number of tracts, books, and periodicals, were issued under his editorial care. The Tract Journal and Child at Home were published for families, and for several years The Sabbath at Home, an illustrated monthly magazine. The Christian Banner was distributed in great numbers in the army and navy. The Freedman and The Freedman's Journal were small monthly sheets for the use of the emancipated blacks. About five hundred different tracts and pamphlets were issued, and five hundred and twenty-five volumes of various sizes, making an aggregate, including periodicals, of 55,672,276 copies. In addition to the ordinary uses of this class of publications, there was a very wide distribution among the soldiers and sailors in service; and another, of matter provided specially for them, among the freedmen, to aid in the incipient stages of their education. The entire cost of these publications, from May 1, 1859 to May 1, 1870, was $1,002,997.06. Dr. Warren is the author of the following publications: Sermons, On Female Education (Hartford, 1852), On the Death of Mrs. Mary Langdon of Plymouth (June, 1853), On Finished Work: Pastoral Valedictory (January, 1856). Tracts and pamphlets, A Corpse in a Ball-dress (Boston, 1859), The Pemberton Mill (1860), How to Begin to be a Christian (1861), A Happy New Year (1864), The Flag of our Country (1864), The Death of the Soul (1867, pp. 28), How to Repent (1867, pp. 31), How to Believe (1867, pp. 32). Bound volumes, The Seamen's Cause: embracing the History, Results, and Present Condition of the Efforts for the Moral Improvement of Seamen, New York, 1858; The Sisters, a Memoir of Elizabeth H. Abbie A., and Sarah F. Dickerman, Boston, 1859 (often reprinted); Sadduceism, a Refutation of the Doctrine of the Annihilation of the Wicked, 1860, pp. 66 (the same work rewritten and republished under the title, The Wicked not Unaided, 1866, pp. 75; The Cross-Bearer, a Vision, 1861; The Picture Lesson-Book, 1861 (designed for the use of the refugee slaves in the camps, and believed to be the first book ever printed for the special benefit of that class), pp. 32; Life of Governor Briggs (for distribution among the soldiers), 1861, pp. 18; Snow-Flakes: A Chapter from the Book of Nature, 1863; The Freedman's Primer, or First Reader, 1861, pp. 61; The Freedman's Second Reader, 1861, pp. 160; The Christian Armor, 1861; The Cup-Bearer, 1865; The Freedman's Third Reader, 1865, pp. 261; The Freedman's Spelling-Book, 1865, pp. 160; The Sabbath at Home: An Illustrated Religious Magazine for the Family, 1867-69, 3 vols.; The New Testament, with Notes, Pictorial Illustrations, and References; vol. 1, The Four Gospels, with a Chronological Harmony, 1867; the same work, enlarged by the addition of the Acts of the Apostles, 1871; Jerusalem, Ancient and Modern, a Descriptive Book of Select Pictures of that City, containing a detailed account of nearly two hundred points of interest in the pictures, a résumé of the recent explorations in the city, and outlines of its topography, history, and antiquities, 1873, pp. 64; The Three Judges, Story of the Men who beheld their King (with an introduction by Rev. Leonard Bacon, D.D.), New York, 1873; Chaucer's Judd, or The Stolen Boy of the Revolution, 1871; The Parousia, A Critical Study of the Scripture Doctrines of Christ's Second Coming, his Reign as King, the Resurrection of the Dead, and the General Judgment, Portland, Me., 1879, 2d ed. (re-written and enlarged) 1881; Our Father's Book, or The Divine Authority and Origin of the Bible, Boston, 1885; The Book of Revelation, a Study, New York, 1886; The Standby Families in America, Soc., Portland (in press).

WHITON, James Morris, Ph.D. (Yale College, New Haven, Conn., 1861), Congregationalist; b. in Boston, Mass., April 11, 1833; educated in Boston Latin School, and graduated at Yale College 1853; was rector of Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, Conn., 1854-64; pastor of the First Congregational Church, Lynn, Mass., 1865-69; of the North Congregational Church, Lynn, 1869-75; principal of Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass., 1876-78; pastor of First Congregational Church, Newark, N.J., 1879-85; acting pastor of the Trinity Congregational Church, Tremont, New-York City, 1886. His theological standpoint is that of a Trinitarian Christian evolutionist; regarding the Trinity, interpreted through the principle of the Divine immanency as the biblical symbol which sets forth the being and the relation of God to the world, as the fundamental and comprehensive article of faith. Creation, revelation, and judgment are eternal Divine processes, all manifested in the world of the past, present, and future. Redemption is essentially a constructive rather than a reconstructive process. Atonement is the Divine process of the reconciliation of man to God, by an expiatory satisfaction — mediated through the historical experience of the Christ, producing an adequate repentance — to that which is of God in conscience. The norm of conscience for faith, duty, and hope, is in the Holy Scriptures, whose authority as a divine revelation centres in the living Word of God, the Christ, speaking therein. The promised advent of the Christ is now being progressively realized in the life of the world that now is, and the resurrection likewise in the life of the world to come. He is the author of Latin Lessons, Boston, 1860; Greek Lessons, New York, 1861; Select Orations of Lysias, Boston, 1875, 2d ed. 1881; "Is Eternal Punishment Endless?" 1876, 2d ed. 1877 (maintaining that endless punishment is not decisively revealed in the New Testament: it raised a question as to his further fellowship in the Congregational body, which was decided in his favor by a council at Newark, 1879, — twenty-eight to three, cf. stenographic report in The Congregationalist, April 12, 1879); Six Weeks' Preparation for Reading Caesar, 1877, 3d ed. 1886; Aurilia Vergiliana (pamphlet), 1878, 2d ed. 1886; Essay on the Gospel according to Matthew, 1880; The Gospel of the Resurrection, 1881, reprinted in London, Eng., under title Beyond the Shadow, 1881; Early Pupils of the Spirit (pamphlet), Lond., 1881; Three Months' Preparation for Reading Xenophon (published in conjunction with his daughter Mary B. Whiton), N. Y., 1885; The Evolution of Revelation (pamphlet), 1885; The Divine Satisfaction, London, 1886; frequent contributions to the religious journals, occasional articles in The New-Englander, etc.

WIESELER, Karl, Lic. Theol. (Göttingen, 1839), D.D. (hon., Kiel, 1846), German theologian; b. at Altenzell, near Celle, Hannover, Feb. 28, 1813; d. at Greifswald, March 11, 1884. He was the second son of Pastor Christian Christoph Wieseler, and younger brother of the well-known Friedrich Wieseler, professor of philology and archaeology at Göttingen. In his seventh year both his parents died; and he was brought up by near relatives, who first thought to make him a forester. He attended the gymnasium at Salzwedel from 1825 to 1831; then the university of Göttingen, where he was especially influenced by Lucke, from 1831 to 1835. In the latter he became repentant, 1836; privat-docent of Old and New Testament exegesis, 1839; professor extraordinary there, 1843; ordinary professor at Kiel, 1851; at Greifswald, 1863. In 1870 he was made Consistorialrath and member of the Pomeranian Consistory at Stettin, and discharged these latter duties, in connection with those of his professorship, until his death. He was the author of De christiano capitis pueri vel admittendi vel repudiandi fundamento (prize essay), Göttingen, 1835; Num loci Mk. x. 20 et Jo. 21 genui sint nec ne indoluerit in fine, ut aditus ad historiam apparitionum J. Christi sit comprehensus apeririatur, 1839; Auslegung und Kritik der apokalyptischen Literatur des A. u. N. T., 1 Beitrag, Die 70 Wochen und die 63 Jahren des Propheten Daniel, *erörtert und erläutert mit steter Rücksicht auf die biblischen Parallelen sowie Geschichte und Chronologie, nebst einer historisch-kritisch Untersuchung über den Sinn, etc., der Worte Jesu von s. Venables, A Chronological Synopsis of the Four Gospels, London, 1876, 2d ed. 1878). His chief results are: birth of Jesus, 750 A.U.C.; imprisonment of the Baptist, Prim 782 A.U.C.; day of Jesus' death, April 7, 783 A.U.C., or 30 A.D.; Chronologie des apostolischen Zeitalters bis zum Ende

Apostel Paulus und Petrus, Göttingen, 1848; chief results; stoning of Stephen, about 39 A.D.; conversion of Paul, 40 A.D.; apostolic council at Jerusalem, about 50 A.D.; beginning of the third Pauline missionary journey, 51 A.D.; duration of the Caesarian and Roman imprisonment, 58-61 A.D. He rejects the theory of the second Roman imprisonment of Paul, and dates the pastoral epistles partly from the third missionary journey, especially in the Ephesian residence of the apostle, and partly from the end of his Roman imprisonment; Exercitationum criticarum in Clementis Romani quae feruntur homilias, 1857; Commentar über den Brief Pauli an die Galater, 1859; Eine Untersuchung über den Hebräerbrief, namentlich seinen Verfasser und seine Leser, Kiel, 1860-61, 2 halves; Beiträge zur richtigen Würdigung der Evangelien und der evangelischen Geschichte, Gotha, 1869 (a reproduction of the principal contents of his Chronolog. Synopse); Geschichte des Bekenntnisstandes der lutherischen Kirche Pommerus bis zur Einführung der Union, Stettin, 1870; Der Abschnitt Rom. vii. 7-25 exegetisch und biblisch-theologische criert, Greifswald, 1875 (pp. 16); Die deutsche Nationalität der kleinasiatischen Galater, Gütersloh, 1877; Die Christenverfolgungen der Cäsaren bis zum 3. Jahrhundert historisch und chronologisch untersucht, 1878; Zur Geschichte der neutestamentlichen Schrift und des Urchristentums, Leipzig, 1880 (contains three essays: 1. The Corinthian parties, and their relation to the false teachers mentioned in Galatians, Romans, and Revelation; 2. The teaching and structure of the Epistle to the Romans; 3. The author, date, and mode of interpretation, of the Johannine revelation); Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Religion der alten Germanen in Asien und Europa, mit religionsgeschichtl. Parallelen, 1881. Articles in periodicals, of especial value, may be mentioned, Die Lehre des Hebräerbriefs und der Tempel von Leontopolis (in Theol. Studien und Kritiken, 1867, IV.), in which he defends his book on Hebräer, although on some points presenting a different opinion; Das 4. Buch Ezra (do., 1870), Das Tolerier Polykarpus (do., 1880), Die Assumptio Mosis (in Jahrb. f. d. Theologie, 1868), Der Barnabasbrief (do., 1870), Der Clemensbrief an die Korinther (do., 1877), Über einige Data aus dem Leben Luthers (in Kahn's Zeitschrift für historische Theologie, 1871, IV.), discussing the dates of his birth, entrance into the convent, and journey to Rome; articles in Herzog, etc. Cf. art. Wieseler, by Zoekler, in Herzog 3, xvii. 100-104. *

He has contributed frequently to religious periodicals.

WILLIAMS, Right Rev. Channing Moore, S.T.D. (Columbia College, New-York City, 1867), Episcopalian, missionary bishop of Yedo, Japan; b. at Richmond, Va., July 18, 1829; graduated from the College of William and Mary, Virginia, 1853, and from the Theological Seminary of Virginia, near Alexandria, 1855; became missionary bishop of China (with jurisdiction in Japan), 1866; relieved by the General Convention of 1871 of the China mission, and his title changed to that of missionary bishop of Yedo, with jurisdiction in Japan.

WILLIAMS, George, Church of England, layman, the founder of the Young Men's Christian Association; b. at a farmhouse in the parish of Dulverton, Somersetshire, Eng., Oct. 11, 1821. Having completed his education, he began his business-life at Bridgewater. There he was converted in 1837, and immediately endeavored to lead his associates to Christ. In this he was so successful that a considerable number professed religion. In 1841 he became a junior assistant in the dry-goods establishment of Messrs. George Hitchcock & Co., 72 St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Finding that the majority of his fellows (there were some 120 in all) were indifferent to religion, while many were heathens, in 1843 he induced a few of the spiritually-minded assistants to hold with him, at regular intervals, a prayer-meeting in a bedroom of the establishment, — it being then customary for clerks to occupy rooms in the business houses where they were employed, — for the conversion of their fellow-clerks; and out of that meeting originated the Young Men's Christian Association movement. Mr. George Hitchcock, their principal, who had been converted since Mr. Williams came, having mentioned these meetings to his friend Mr. W. D. Owen, proprietor of a large drapery establishment in the West End, the latter spoke of them to Mr. James Smith, his principal assistant, who immediately commenced similar meetings amongst the young men. In the spring of 1844, Mr. Williams was impressed with the importance of introducing similar meetings in all the large establishments of London. He broached the subject, first of all, to his most intimate friend and fellow-assistant, the late Mr. Edward Beaumont, on a Sunday evening in the latter part of May, 1844. The following week, after the prayer-meeting, three or four of the most zealous remained behind for conversation upon the subject; and it was then resolved to call a meeting of all the religious young men of the establishment, to meet on Thursday, June 6, 1844, to consider the importance and practicability of establishing a society for improving the spiritual condition of young men engaged in the drapery and other trades. At this meeting the following persons were present: Messrs. George Williams, C. W. Smith, James Smith (from Mr. Owen's), by invitation of Mr. Williams), Norton Smith, Edward Valentine, Edward Beaumont, — Glasen, Francis John Cockett, Edward Rogers, John Harvey, John C. Symons, William Creese. Mr. James Smith was chosen chairman; Mr. Valentine, treasurer; and Messrs. Symons and Creese, secretaries. It was decided to form the projected society; and Mr. C. W. Smith, being delegated to choose a name for it, suggested among others that of The Young Men's Christian Association, which was afterwards adopted, Thursday, July 1. Mr. Williams being a young man, and merely a draper's assistant, modestly kept himself in the background in the early meetings of the Association, yet in the absence of the first chairman was always asked to preside; but to him, under God, belongs the credit of being the founder of that organization which has spread all over the world, and to it he has freely given his time and his means. He was the treasurer of the parent association from 1863 to 1885, succeeding Mr. Hitchcock; and is now president, succeeding the late Earl of Shaftesbury. He was taken by Mr. Hitchcock into partnership, and now is the head of the firm of Hitchcock, Williams, & Co., in which establishment he was a clerk. Besides the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Williams is the president of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, the Christian Community, the Young Men's Foreign Missionary, and of several other societies. He takes an active interest in the British and Foreign Bible Society, the London City Mission, the Sunday-school Union, the Bishop of London's Diocesan Council for Young Men, the Young Women's Christian Association, and many others.

The success of the Young Men's Christian Association was assured from the start. Its membership was twelve on June 6; in five months the association numbered seventy, each of whom had been carefully examined as to his Christian zeal before admittance, and religious services had been founded by it in ten drapers' establishments. On March 6, 1845, the membership was 160; on Nov. 5, 1846, the second annual meeting, branch associations in different places in London and in other cities were reported. In 1848, 180 members in London, and 1,000 in all, were reported. In 1849 the Earl of Shaftesbury became president, and so continued until his death, Oct. 1, 1885, when he was succeeded by Mr. Williams. In September, 1886, it was reported that there were 3,376 branch associations throughout the world, with nearly 200,000 members and associates. For an interesting and trustworthy history of the parent association, see George J. Stevenson's Historical Records of the Young Men's Christian Association from 1844 to 1884, London, 1884; for a brief account of the movement in general, see article, Young Men's Christian Association, in the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia, vol. iii. 2561-2566.

ZUNZ, Leopold, Ph.D., Hebrew; b. at Detmold, Germany, Aug. 10, 1794; d. at Berlin, March 21, 1886. He was educated at the University of Berlin; became rabbi to the new synagogue there, 1820, but retired after two years, and started a society for Jewish culture and science, to which Heinrich Heine belonged. But the society, which was nicknamed "Young Jerusalem," although embracing many men of talent, soon broke up, perhaps because of Zunz's radicalism. Many of its members became Christians. From 1824 to 1832, Zunz was director of the New Jewish Congregational School. From 1825 to 1835 he edited the Spener'sche Zeitung. From 1835 to 1839, at Prague, he again undertook ministerial functions. From 1839 to 1850 he was director of the Normal Seminary in Berlin. Since 1845 he was a member of the Board of Commissioners for the educational interests of the Jews in Prussia. His long life was one of great literary activity. His works are distinguished by learning and by beauty and clearness of style. Among them may be mentioned, Etwas über die rabbinische Literatur, Berlin, 1818 (which first brought him into notice); Predigten, 1823, 2d ed. 1846; Die gottesdienstlichen Vorträge der Juden, historisch entwickelt, 1832 (his most valuable book); Namen der Juden, Leipzig, 1837; Zeittafel über die gesamte heilige Schrift, Berlin, 1839; Zur Geschichte und Literatur, Bd. 1., 1845; Damaskus, ein Wort zu Abwehr, 2d ed. 1859; Die synagogale Poesie des Mittelalters, 1855-59, 2 parts; Die Vorschriften über Eidesleistung der Juden, 1859; Wahlrede, 1861; 2. Wahlrede, 1861; Politisch und nicht politisch (lecture), 1862; Selbstregierung (lecture), 1864; Sterbelage, 1864; Die geistige Gesundheit (lecture), 1864; Die hebräischen Handschriften in Italien, 1864; Literaturgeschichte der synagogalen Poesie, 1865; Nachtrag dazu, 1867; Israels gottesdienstliche Poesie (lecture), 1870; Deutsche Briefe, Leipzig, 1872. •

IMMER, Heinrich Albert, D.D. (Basel, 1860), Swiss Reformed theologian; b. at Unterseen, Aug. 10, 1801; d. at Bern, March 23, 1881. His father was pastor of Unterseen, Canton Bern. There was a clumsiness about him which his father mistook for stupidity, and severely punished. The effect of such treatment was to retard his mental development. He learned bookbinding at Lausanne and Zurich, and began business at Thun; but the reading, in 1831, of Schleiermacher's

Reverber der Religion so powerfully moved him, that he determined to study theology. He entered, after a brilliant examination, the University of Bern in 1835, passed his theological examination in 1838, and continued his studies at Bonn and Berlin 1838-40. He then returned home, became a pastor, and, after ten years' service, became professor extraordinary of theology at Bern 1850, ordinary professor of New-Testament exegesis and of theology there 1856, and so remained until his retirement as professor emeritus in 1881. He exerted a great and wide influence. He was the author of Schlüsselmacher als religiöser Charakter (lecture), Bern, 1859; Der Unsterblichkeitsglaube im Lichte der Geschichte und der gegenwärtigen Wissenschaft (lecture), 1868; Der Conflict zwischen dem Staatskirchentum und dem methodistischen Dissentertum im Jahre 1829 in Bern, 1870 (pp. 71); John Bunyan, Basel, 1871; Die Geschichtsquellen des Lebens Jesu (lecture, pp. 29), Leipzig, 1873; Hermeneutik des neuen Testaments, Wittenberg, 1873 (English trans. with additional notes, by Prof. A. H. Newman, Hermeneutics of the New Testament, Andover, 1877); Neutestamentliche Theologie, Bern, 1878. Cf. sketch by R. Ruettschi in Meili's Theologische Zeitschrift aus der Schweiz, vol. i. (St. Gallen, 1881), pp. 359-392. *

MOBERT, Jacob Isidor, D.D. (University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, 1869), Episcopalian; b. at Cassel, Germany, Nov. 6, 1829; received his first education in the schools there; spent several years in business, which gave him opportunity of an early residence in England; there he passed through college, and after studies continued at Leipzig and Heidelberg, and extensive travels, took orders in the Church of England in 1857; was curate in Quebec, Canada, 1857-59; assistant (1859), and then rector of St. James's Church, Lancaster, Penn., 1860-69; American chaplain, Dresden, Saxony, 1869-75; since which time he has only partially exercised his ministry, having been engrossed with literary labors. Theologically he holds catholic and non-partisan ground, alike remote from the puerilities of medieval formalism, and the daring negations of the followers of Reuss. His studies have ranged over many fields in theology, philology, philosophy, history, and art. He has written many scholarly articles in different religious periodicals; translated Tholuck's Commentary on the Psalms (London 1856, Philadelphia 1857), and the Commentary on the Catholic Epistles in the American Lange Series, New York, 1867; edited with prolegomena (containing a Life of Tyndale) and various collations, William Tyndale's Five Books of Moses (being a verbatim reprint, copied by his own hand, of the edition of 1550 in the Lenox Library, New York, and compared with Tyndale's Genesis of 1531, and the Pentateuch in the Vulgate, Luther, and Matthew's Bible), New York [1884]; and is the author of the following independent works: Faith Victorians: Account of the Venerable Dr. Johann Ebel, Late Archdeacon of the Old Town Church of Königsberg, in Prussia, London and New York, 1882; Handbook of the English Version of the Bible, with Copious Examples illustrating the Ancestry and Relationship of the Several Versions, and Comparative Tables [1883]; Great Lives: A Course of History in Biographies, Boston, 1886, 2d ed. 1886.

SEYERLEN, K. R., repent in the theological seminary at Tübingen, 1859-61.

SHAFTESBURY, Earl of, was educated at Harrow School; was an ecclesiastical commissioner from 1841 to 1847. His first public philanthropic effort was in 1833, when he introduced in the House of Commons a bill limiting the hours of children's labor in factories to ten a day. It was defeated; but a Government bill enjoining that with the exception of silk and lace mills, no children under nine were to be employed in the factories, while those under thirteen were to work not more than forty-eight hours a week, and were to receive from their employers at least two hours schooling a week, was carried. But it proved so imperfect and ineffective, that in 1838 he introduced another bill on the subject. This the Government also opposed. The outcome of the agitation was, however, that in 1850 he carried his point; and in 1853 Lord Palmerston gave the measure its present shape, viz., that children between eight and thirteen years of age must not be employed more than six hours and a half daily, or ten hours on alternate days, while those of tender years must do their work between ten and six o'clock. In 1840 he secured a royal commission to inquire into the condition of the children not protected by the Factory Act, e.g., those in mines; and, on the strength of its revelations, introduced two bills in 1842, one removing female children from the mines and collieries, and the other providing for the care and education of children in calico-print works. In 1844 he founded the Ragged School Union in London, which has done so much for the outcast children there. In 1861 he introduced in Parliament measures which ultimately led to the prohibition of chimney-sweeping by boys, and the compulsory employment of machines for the purpose. He was in 1834 one of the founders of the London City Mission; and in 1842, of a society for the construction of model lodging-houses. He was president of the British and Foreign Bible Society from 1851 till his death, as also of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was largely instrumental in reforming the treatment of lunatics. He did much to elevate the costermonger class. But it would be impossible to estimate the good he did in the course of his long and active life. He was connected with nearly three hundred religious societies, and with many other philanthropic institutions. In 1884 the freedom of the City of London was presented to him. The secret of his success was his humble piety. For a full account of his extraordinary usefulness, see EDWIN HODDER: The Life and Work of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., London, 1886, 3 vols.

STEVENS, A., hon. A.M. (Brown University).

STEVENS, W. B., practised as a physician in Savannah, Ga., 1838-43.

STEVENSON, William Fleming, D.D. (University of Edinburgh, 1851); b. in Strabane, County Tyrone, Ireland, Sept. 20, 1832; d. at Rathgar, Dublin, Ireland, Sept. 16, 1886. He was of that Ulster Presbyterian stock, which has given a special character to the northern province of Ireland. He graduated M.A. at the University of Glasgow, and finished his theological studies in Scotland and Germany. Occasional passages in his writings show that while interested in the speculative and critical sides of German theology, it was the warm, spiritual, Christian life of Germany, as displayed in German hymns and missions, which attracted him most. In 1856 he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Strabane, became town missionary, and worked in the fever-stricken lanes of the poor part of Belfast. In 1860 he accepted the call of the newly organized Rathgar-road Presbyterian Church, situated in a suburb of Dublin. Mr. Stevenson was the first minister of this church, and it was his first and only regular charge. On the 2d of February, 1862, the present church building was dedicated, Dr. Norman McLeod preaching the opening sermon. Literary work, especially about this time, occupied much of Mr. Stevenson's attention. His contributions to Good Words, Dr. McLeod's periodical, were numerous, and dealt largely with the heart-life and practical Christianity of Germany. Praying and Working, London, 1862, is of interest to the student of social problems, as well as to the friends of missions. Lives and Deeds worth knowing, New York, 1870, composed of collected articles, and published without authority, is not less interesting. Hymns for Church and Home, London, 1873, has a scholarly accuracy and thoroughness which make it very valuable to hymnologists.

In 1871 Mr. Stevenson was called to the work which, in some sense, was the most important of his life, for in that year he became co-adjutor with Rev. Dr. James Morgan, the convener of the Assembly's Foreign Mission; and in 1873 he became sole convener, while retaining the pastorate of his church. Successful as a preacher and a pastor, he seemed even better fitted for this new work, which he had assumed with great diffidence. In 1873 he visited America on the occasion of the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in New York. In 1877 he undertook a journey round the world, in the interests of missions; some papers from his pen appeared on the subject of this journey, in Good Words. In 1881 he was unanimously chosen as moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, which met in Dublin. Of course many offers came to him from fields of work wider than the comparatively narrow one of Irish Presbyterianism; but he simply could not leave his beloved people. His life had now been carried on for many years, under the highest pressure from his double duties as a pastor, and as an organizer and administrator of mission-work. His death, hastened by overwork, occurred suddenly, painlessly, and almost without warning, from heart-disease, in the full tide of his activity. As a pulpit orator, Dr. Stevenson belonged to the first class. His writings give a good idea of his pulpit style. His broadly tolerant spirit won the victory over even Irish party feeling, which runs almost as high in matters ecclesiastical as political. He was a member of the Senate of the Royal University; and his appointment as chaplain to the viceroyal court, under Lord Aberdeen's administration, was regarded as marking a change in the attitude of the government towards Presbyterianism, as the attendance at his funeral of the clergy and highest dignitaries of the Episcopal and other churches, was regarded as an indication of the beginning of a better relation between the branches of the Church Catholic in Ireland than has existed in the past.

STRACK, H. L., "while acknowledging the full right of critical investigation, is convinced that such investigation ought to be combined with reverence for the Holy Scriptures and an earnest Christian faith. That Christ died for us, and rose again, is an irrefutable fact, nay, one inaccessible to criticism." The Kaiser Wilhelm Gymnasium, where he taught in 1872-73, is in Berlin. The title of the monthly Nathanael, which he edits, has been changed, as also its place of publication; it is now called Nathanael. Zeitschrift für die Arbeit der evangelischen Kirche an Israel, Karlsruhe u. Leipzig. He edits, with Professor Zockler of Greifswald, the Kurzgefasster Kommentar zu den heiligen Schriften Alten und Neuen Testaments, sowie zu den Apokryphen, Nordlingen, 1886 sqq.

WALDENSTRÖM, P. P. "On the Meaning of the Atonement," Om försönningens Betydelse, Stockholm, 1873, reprinted Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.). A sermon preached in 1872 first gave impetus to the theological movement with which he is identified, and the book was written to defend and explain his views which had attracted so much attention. He prefers to put his distinctive teaching thus: Non per gratiam propter Christum propitiatorem, sed propter gratiam per Christum mediatorem, redemptorem. He is commonly accused in Sweden of denying the divinity of Christ; but this is a slander, for just the contrary is the case. In his translation of the New Testament, he accepts and defends the reading ὁ ἀγαπῶν θεός in John i. 18.

WANAMAKER, John, Presbyterian layman; b. in Philadelphia, Penn., in the year 1838; received a common-school education, and early went into business. WILLIAMS, William R. Mr. Mornay Williams, his son, sends this additional information: "Dr. Williams had no middle name; the initial 'R.' having been assumed by him, in early life, because of the annoying mistakes constantly arising from the simple appellation William Williams. He was ordained and installed as pastor of the Amity Baptist Church on the same evening on which the church itself was recognized, Dec. 17, 1832, remaining pastor to the time of his death, never having had another charge, nor his people another pastor. He was the first secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society (1832); the first secretary, and one of the daughters, of the constitution of the Baptist Ministers' Conference, in January, 1833; for many years a member of the board of trustees of Rochester Theological Seminary, in the formation of which, as also of the University of Rochester (both established in 1850), he was actively concerned. He was also for many years on the publishing committee of the American Tract Society, and in that position corrected the proofs of their foreign publications (viz., French, German, Italian, and Spanish); he was one of the vice-presidents of that society, as also of the American Bible Society. He wrote the introduction to [the American reprint of John] Harris's Great Commission; or, the Christian Church constituted and charged to convey the Gospel to the World, Boston, 1842; to that of Miss Grigg's Jacqueline Pascal, or Convent Life at Port Royal, New York, 1854; and to [W. W.] Everts's William Colgate: a Christian Layman, Philadelphia, 1851. His Religious Progress, and Lectures on the Lord's Prayer, were both republished in Scotland [in one volume, Edinburgh and London, 1851]."
